Students use experience of 60's to help solve problems of 70's

By MIKE IZDEPSKI
Staff Reporter

Students have used the experiences gained during the sixties to help solve problems in the seventies. That's what John Fischer and Larry Magid, two former student activists, and present UMass employees, said yesterday.

In separate interviews Fischer, economic coordinator of the Student Organizing Project (SOP) and Magid, director of the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) voiced their strong support for a student union.

Magid, former student at the University of California at Berkley (class of '69) pointed out the basic differences between today and the years of the anti-war movement.

"During the sixties" Magid said, "students began to realize that society had to be changed and tried to answer the question 'why' a change was necessary. Today, students have a wider understanding of how institutions control people and have accepted the need for change. The question they are now asking is 'how' to change society."

Magid mentioned the different level of ideologies of the anti-war movement: "You had many sectarian splinter groups trying to push their brand. There was little consensus among the various groups, other than the basic one that change was needed. The students of the seventies are more part of one big group, they're getting down to business and have the ability to develop coherent strategies."

Affirmative Action should continue

By PAUL BRADLEY

Affirmative Action policies that call for equal opportunity hiring at the university will be affected by a 10 per cent budget cuback but will continue to operate "in principle", according to James DeShields, staff assistant in the chancellor's office.

"Affirmative action policies will be affected in a very practical way," said DeShields, "a reduced number of people being hired will affect affirmative action within departmental frameworks."

DeShields said that although it is likely that less people will be hired, affirmative action policies will still be intact as far as percentages go.

'It is impossible for the government to define affirmative action'

Patty Asack, a staff assistant in the chancellor's office, said that any across the board cuts would have a great impact on women and minorities because these groups generally have been the last hired and will be the first to be fired in the face of budget cuts.

"No one group should absorb unduly the impact of a budget cut," she said, "and a programatic approach to cuts rather than an across the board cut will help to alleviate this."

Asack said that although she feels that a programatic approach will not solve all the problems of keeping within the guidelines of affirmative action policies, she believes this would be the best way.

"Individual programs would have to keep their own goals in mind," of which affirmative action is one," she said, "without wiping out the strides we have made over the last three years."

Both Asack and DeShields felt that reductions in affirmative action percentages would not have an effect on federal funding to the university. The Department of Housing, Education, and Welfare says that an institution must follow affirmative action guidelines before funds will be granted.

"It is impossible for the government to operationally define affirmative action," said DeSheilds, "what they demand is a good faith effort."

DeShields conceded that the term "good faith" was "ambiguous", but that he felt it was the view of the chancellor that the policies were still intact, and would continue to operate.

Asack said that people hired after the December hiring freeze were hired on the basis of "critical need only" and have been hired in compliance with affirmative action policies.

There may be problems in getting unions to strictly adhere to the affirmative action policies because they have long been based on the seniority system. Consultation between the administration and the individual departments might be called on in these cases, according to Asack.

DeShield said that the administration and the department will have to assess the impact of such things as tenure, professors leaving on sabbatical, and vacations in order to come up with hiring statistics. Only then can the departments begin to work to fall within the guidelines of affirmative action.

DeShields said that although the university does face severe cutbacks, affirmative action guidelines are still intact and will reflect general percentages that have been projected as satisfactory.

UMass comes in third in the space race. Actually, this is UMass student Gary Kittmacher's second attempt to fly his eight foot rocket at Orchard Hill. The flight wasn't exactly a smashing success, as the rocket ended up in a tree. Gary had planned to launch a 16 foot rocket, however he ran into financial difficulties.

CC Board reaffirms support for Student Worker's Union

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

Following a discussion of the legality of the Campus Center (CC) Board of Governors supporting an employee union in the CC, the board voted last night to pass an amended version of their original support for the Union of Student Employees (USE).

Board Chairperson Jeff Taggart read from a letter received from Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery asking the board to reconsider its previous vote of support for the Union.

In the letter, Bromery said he did not think it was appropriate for the board to support the Union at this time because of "several important issues which are under consideration by the proper legal authority."

Bromery asked that the board either rescind its motion or "defer action on it until the legal question has been resolved."

The board voted unanimously to uphold its original motion to support the Union.

Following the vote board member John Hays introduced an amendment to change the board's specific support of the Union of Student Employees to read that the board will "recognize and support any employee's right to unionize."

Hays said he thought it was, "inappropriate for the board at this time to name a particular union; the Labor Relations Board will choose the union."

In opposition to the Hays amendment, board member Milton Kerstein said, "The point is, 60 per cent of the students in the building have mandated the USE to represent them and they are asking us for a vote of support."

By a vote of eight to five, the board passed the Hays amendment.

In other action last night the board voted to accept the bid from the Eastern Home Builders and Developers to remodel the Bluewall during the summer. The total cost of remodeling will be $39,754.

The board also approved a bid from the C.B. Swift Company of Boston to install a new carpet in the Bluewall at a cost of $11,182.

Bluewall renovations will begin about June first and should be completed when classes begin in the Fall.

Eastern Home Builders and Developers, a Springfield firm, was the only company to bid on the physical renovation of the Bluewall. C.B. Swift was the lowest of eight bidders for the carpet installation contract.

Library cuts magazine subscriptions, cites 'uncertain budgetary situation'

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

Library administrators have cancelled approximately 2,000 magazines and other serials. The subscriptions will be allowed to run out and will not be renewed.

Acting Chief Bibliographer John Kendall said the cuts are being planned because of "a highly uncertain bugetary situation" and to "prune away" little-used publications.

Administrators say they are concerned about the already inflated acquisitions budget along with the prospect of further cuts in the fiscal 1976 state budget.

Kendall said he expects the loss of these serials to have a "minimal" effect on student research.

Library staff have been reviewing the 16,000 serials over the past year in an effort to "rank the serials and decide those which we can do away with," said Kendall.

Priority lists have been compiled and are currently available for faculty and student review at the main library and branch libraries.

Kendall said the priority lists are tentative and subject to change after this scrutiny.

Kendall said many of the cancellations will "involve a cancellation of one of several subscriptions," ending duplication in the UMass library system.

According to releases from the chief bibliographer's office, the serial cuts will come under areas designed to cut: "duplication of materials in the UMass library system; the least important of several titles dealing with the same subject; excessively costly items and titles with marginal relevance to present academic programs."

The decision on which publications to cut was sometimes decided on "evidence of use," said Kendall. "If an issue or volume showed signs of heavy use we gave it a higher priority."

Anticipating budget cuts, library officials imposed a "virtual moratorium" on new acquisition spending last month.

The moratorium on puchases is planned to last until the next fiscal year which begins July 1.

The percentage of the acquisition's budget spent on serials is 50 per cent in a "good year — one with sufficient funding," said Kendall.

Describing inflation in the cost of periodicals as "frightful" Kendall said, "We could be spending 100 per cent on serials if the budget is small."

To counter this possibility, Library Director Richard J. Talbot has said he estimates $260,000 saved from this year's acquisition budget would go toward renewing 45 per cent of the subscriptions.

UMass administrators hope to encourage cooperation with libraries in the five-college area and this could be a deciding factor in lessening the brunt of the cuts, they say.

Hampshire Inter Library Center (HILC) which is funded by the five colleges and the Forbes Library in Northampton is counted on to continue subscriptions to those publications UMass drops.

Kendall, representing UMass at a HILC selection committee meeting, said yesterday that HILC members agreed to "keep what is already in HILC and those publications that we decide to cancel.
publications that we decide to cancel.

Kendall said some of the cancellations will leave an option to purchase individual issues open to the library. This change, from a standing order to a monograph series, allows recommended issues to be brought into the library.

Some Americans reportedly stranded in Saigon

Delayed dispatch tells of criticism

SAIGON [UPI] — May 5 Delayed — Since the last helicopter carried the last U.S. Marine guard out of Saigon early Wednesday morning April 30, there has been growing criticism of the haste and apparent excitement of the evacuation.

Left behind were other Americans, foreign diplomats and uncounted hundreds of Vietnamese employees they had promised to take with them.

"The Americans could not even leave Saigon with class," said one foreigner who remained behind.

The South Korean Embassy charge d'affaires stopped trying to get into the U.S. Embassy when a Marine guard hit him in the chest with a tear gas grenade. He went into hiding afterwards.

Americans working at the U.S. Information Service went secretly and separately to the embassy then telephoned their offices to tell Vietnamese who volunteered to stay until the last moment to try to get to an evacuation point.

American prisoners were left in the Saigon prison and were in Saigon when the Viet Cong opened the jail hours after the final U.S. helicopter had left.

Those involved in the operation said there was sniper fire at the embassy compound and antiaircraft fire at the U.S. helicopters.

But those who stayed or were left behind saw no such thing.

An American woman who was in the embassy trying to help a group of 15 Vietnamese leave said she heard one explosion which Marines told her was a hand grenade.

"That explosion was quite a way from the embassy and there was no other shooting or explosion I heard," she said.

A senior U.S. Embassy official told the woman the front gate of the embassy was not safe and be left. The woman stayed for another hour before walking back to downtown Saigon.

Interviews with persons of different nationalities who were at the embassy that evening — the most tense time of the evacuation — said there was no panic and no shooting in the area.

UPI reporter Chad Huntley drove to the embassy about 7 p.m. He said about 300 persons, mostly Vietnamese, were pressed against the gate asking to be included in the evacuation.

"There was absolutely no panic, no mob action," Huntley said.

"When I walked up to the gate, the people cleared a path for me."

Huntley said the claims of U.S. Marines that 10,000 persons were besieging the embassy were untrue.

UPI correspondents Bert Okuley, Ken Englade and Paul Vogle went with Huntley to the embassy and Okuely and Englade got in. They were evacuated by helicopter. Englade later recounted in Hong Kong:

"About 250 to 300 Vietnamese were in front of the main gate at the consulate, next door to the embassy. The crowd was quiet, but they were pressed tight. To get to the gate you literally had to push them aside.

"They did not try to stop our progress except to beg us to help them get out and to take their identity papers into the compound to speed their exit. Okuley collected a whole handful. When we got to the gate, the Marine asked us to throw our luggage over the fence which I did.

"Then the Marine climbed up on the gate and I handed over another bag. He told us to lock arms and I grabbed Bert with my left hand and the Marine with my right arm. Another Marine opened the gate, slipped out behind us to keep anyone from coming in with us while the first Marine pulled us through.

Indochina developments

Refugees welcomed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate overwhelmingly passed a "Good Samaritan" resolution welcoming Indochina refugees yesterday and approved $17 million in stop-gap spending for refugee resettlement.

In the House, an appropriations subcommittee worked on a long-term bill even more generous than the $507 million President Ford requested.

The Senate first passed by 91 to 1 a resolution stating it "welcomes warmly the latest exiles to our shores — the refugees from South Vietnam and Cambodia." Only Sen. William Scott, R-Va., dissented on grounds the refugee influx might aggravate U.S. unemployment rates.

Viet ships surrender

By United Press International

A 27-ship South Vietnamese naval squadron with an admiral and high-ranking officers of the former Saigon government has surrendered to the Viet Cong, the Yugoslav Tanjug news agency reported yesterday. The new Communist regime also ordered high army officers to turn themselves in.

The Tanjug dispatch from Peking said the naval squadron, sailing off the South Vietnamese coast, flew white flags in surrendering on a promise of amnesty. Its officers joined large groups of former government officials who have reported to the new Communist rulers, Tanjug said. Saigon's new military menagement committee pledged the new Communist regime "will forgive completely" those Vietnamese who had committed crimes during the war if they "repent of what they have done."

Phnom Penh's collapse confused, hectic

By RICHARD BOYLE

BANKOK [UPI] — Nearly 1,000 persons made their way to the French Embassy compound following the fall of Phnom Penh on April 17 and then to Thailand three weeks later in two road convoys. The fact that so many were able to do so with only three deaths is a miracle of sorts.

As we drove out through the city it was a ghost town. Outside of Le Phnom hotel, a unit of Khmer Rouge troops was drilling. Aside from them and the few guards that were on duty on the streets, it was lifeless city. No one was on the streets.

Sanitary conditions at the embassy became appalling. There were outbreaks of illness, as well as problems of food and water in the early days. The dedication and skill of a handful of doctors and nurses that were in the compound did much to prevent a disaster.

The three-day trip by truck and bus from Phnom Penh to the Thai border was physically exhausting, but was an incredible experience because it gave us a look at a Cambodia that few outsiders have ever seen.

In the first few days of our stay at the embassy, a drama of major proportions was under way outside. Shortly after they took over the city, the Khmer Rouge circulated, through it with loudspeakers, telling the population to leave for the countryside.

For several days we watched as the populace — swollen to well over 1 million at the war's end — went past in a steady procession. Some went in cars and some were in ox carts, but most walked. Patients were even ordered out of hospitals and were taken out by their relatives.

The drama had begun on April 17 when Phnom Penh finally fell after five years of war. The takeover went quickly, within the space of a few hours, although there was some fighting inside the city itself.

The French Embassy compound was in the path of advancing Khmer Rouge troops who were entering the city from the north and it turned out to be a unique observation post.

Early in the morning refugees started flooding into the city past the embassy. Men, women and children carrying mats and cooking utensils, their few meager possessions, streamed through the large square in front of the embassy.

When the sound of small arms fire erupted nearby, the square quickly became deserted. There were also mortars and rockets being fired and the windows of the embassy buildings rattled from the concussion of shells landing nearby. It was impossible to tell which side was firing them.

6 area governors welcome refugees

Compiled From Wires

New England's governors generally welcome the idea of Vietnamese refugees settling in their region. But there are some reservations.

Meanwhile House subcommittee approved an initial $405 million for Vietnam refugee resettlement in "a quickie action" that permits President Ford to ask for money later.

The $405 million approved by the House Appropriations subcommittee is the appropriation that will finance the separate refugee resettlement bill being processed by the House Judiciary committee. The appropriation bill was sent to the full Appropriations Committee for action, and the two companion bills will likely come to a House floor vote next week.

The six-state area is marked by high unemployment, and Connecticut Gov. Ella Grasso told a news conference this week that her state won't extend an official welcome.

"While Connecticut doesn't react ungraciously, we cannot invite refugees to come here unless it's done by individual citizens," she said citing a 10 per cent unemployment rate.

In Rhode Island, Gov. Philip W. Noel said he thinks citizens "are willing to accept their share of responsibility to provide a decent life for these unfortunate people."

But Rhode Island's unemployment rate is over 16 per cent — and Noel conceded "we are not in the most healthy economic state.

"We have to be very careful about qualifying any feeling of compassion we have," he said. "We have to be very careful to what extent we should participate with the rest of the nation in achieving what should be a common goal to make sure these people have decent economic opportunities in this country."

Other states issued more friendly statements.

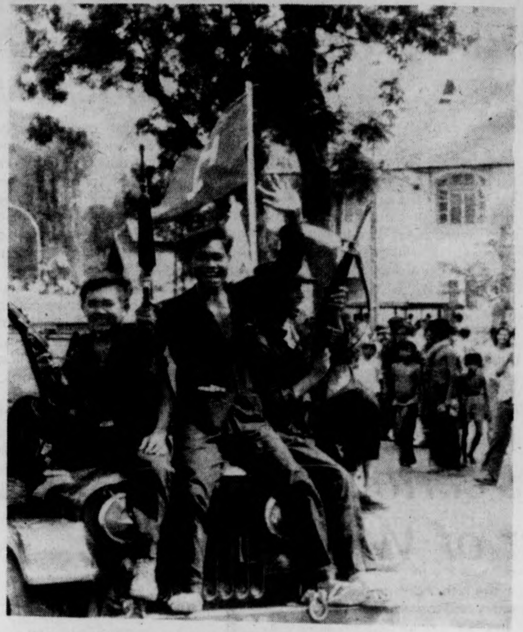
Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis says the Bay State — with unemployment rate of 11.8 per cent — will welcome any Vietnamese who wish to settle there.

"To do anything but greet these people with friendship and assistance would be a rejection of the very best that is in us," said Dukakis.

"I hope I speak for all the people of this state that Massachusetts welcomes any Vietnamese refugees who settle here."

He said he asked Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd "to assist persons wishing to sponsor Vietnamese refugees here, and to coordinate whatever response may be ultimately necessary from this administration.

"The commonwealth has always opened its heart and door to immigrant people," said Dukakis. "I wouldn't ever want it said we shut our doors today."



Khmer Rouge soldiers mount on a military vehicle as it rolls through the streets of Phnom Penh, Cambodia on April 17, after the surrender of the city. The picture was released yesterday.

State employe union leaders urge strike

BOSTON [AP] — State employe union leaders said yesterday that their members should strike unless Gov. Michael S. Dukakis agrees to bargain over planned layoffs.

"If state employes don't wake up they're going to get whipped," said Howard V. Doyle, president of the American Federation of State County and Municipal Employes (AFSCME).

"They ought to spontaneously rise up and walk off their jobs."

A strike by state workers, which has been threatened before by their union leaders, is illegal under state law.

Dukakis has ordered state agency heads to cut spending by at least 10 per cent for the coming fiscal year, and has said some workers will be laid off.

The governor originally said those layoffs would be limited and has not set a figure. Employe union officials have speculated that the layoffs could be substantial.

Paul Quirk, head of the state's social worker union, said at a press conference with Doyle and other union leaders, that "our big stick is a strike."

The union officials called for an immediate meeting with Dukakis to find out how many layoffs are planned.

"We will demand that he negotiate with us as representatives of more than 30,000 state employes on any proposed layoffs..." the alliance of union leaders said.

Quirk said they would give Dukakis no more than one week to respond.

Doyle said employes are bitter because Dukakis first said he opposes an 11 per cent cost-of-living pay raise because the $70 million tab would require massive layoffs.

"It now appears that Mr. Dukakis intends having it both ways: no increases accompanied by layoff notices," the union leaders said.

A legislative committee has recommended a two-step raise for the approximately 65,000 state workers, up to 11 per cent.

But Doyle said yesterday, the unions are sticking to their demand for a flat 11 per cent in one lump sum.

news summary

Castro reconsiders

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In an apparent breakthrough in a 14-year-old hemispheric cold war, the White House yesterday accepted what appeared to be overtures toward reconciliation by Cuban Premire Fidel Castro.

Presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Castro "seems to have accepted what the White House has referred to as the mutuality of obligation in improving relations between Cuba and the United States."

His remarks were based on news reports from Havana quoting Castro at a news conference as saying, "We wish for the people of the United States a wish of friendship," plus indicating during a talk with visiting U.S. Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., a willingness to consider returning a $2 million ransom from a hijacked U.S. plane plus possible release of nine U.S. political prisoners in Havana.

Rebates out today

BOSTON [AP] — The first batch of federal income tax rebate checks for Massachusetts taxpayers was scheduled to be mailed out today, an Internal Revenue Service spokesman said.

John E. Foristall, district director, said the total value of the first lot will be $46,689,170 and will be distributed among 376,705 persons.

Foristall said tax rebate checks will average between $100 and $200 with a $200 maximum. Persons with adjusted gross incomes of over $30,000 will receive a maximum rebate of $100 and taxpayers who paid less than $100 will receive a rebate equal to the taxes paid.

Energy bill advances

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday neared completion of an energy tax bill that was criticized by two Democratic members on grounds it favored special interests and would do little to conserve fuels.

The bill would raise the federal tax on gasoline, tax cars making inefficient use of fuel, reward industries which save fuels or turn to more plentiful ones.

Chestnut convicted

NEW YORK [UPI] — The former campaign manager for Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, Jack L. Chestnut, Thursday was convicted of willfully soliciting and accepting an illegal corporate contribution from a dairymen's cooperative during the senator's 1970 campaign.

A jury of nine women and three men found Chestnut guilty of soliciting and accepting a $12,000 corporate contribution in June 1970.

Starving cartoonist sells 'Sex and Violence'...

By DOROTHY MULLER
Staff Reporter

"Did you see this? It's my very own comic book. Only fifty cents. I drew it myself. It's cheaper than your average underground comic book. Buy a little something to waste your time on."

Kris Jackson is a self-described "starving artist" who will graduate this semester from UMass. No one would publish his work, so he printed a comic book composite of his work, Sex and Violence, and is currently "hawking" his first issue in the Campus Center.

"You have to keep your pitch up. If you say come here, they do. Some read five pages and they're hooked. Others read the whole thing and leave," says Jackson.

While Jackson was talking, a female student approached and perused his comic. "Want to buy one, only fifty cents. Cheap," he says. The girl says no and someone remarks, "Obviously someone who doesn't like sex and violence." But Jackson counters.

"The title," says Jackson, "is a come-on. The material is split half and half. Stuff that's already been published and stuff that can't be published."

Jackson's comic book is the brainchild of many rejection slips. "Nobody would publish me so I decided to publish myself. I sent cartoons to Playboy and when they came back from Playboy, to Penthouse. Then to Grunt and Groan, and Screech. Finally they wound up in a box in my attic. Then I decided to print my own comic book and by-pass the middle man altogether."

Jackson's brainstorm for his first edition of Sex and Violence comic book was the result of hours of reading Will Eisnor's comic book, The Spirit, which was the first underground comic book, published in the forties and fifties.

"I've only seen them in reprint but that's when I decided to print my own. The comic is really in two parts. The first is Violence. The second part comes out next week. Everybody wants to know what the issue will be like."

Jackson's original rational was to make money. "But it looks like I might just break even now." The cover of his comic reflects his concern. "Kris Jackson's Sex and Violence Comix, No. 1 (maybe the last, too).

...As campus cartoonist shows 'Best of Worst'

"Dizzy and Paul: Best of the Worst" is the rather presumptuous title of the show in the Student Union Gallery today and tomorrow. It will consist of all the origianls of "Dizzy and Paul" published since September in the Collegian. The strip is written and drawn by Jim Carson, a senior and BFA major.

Carson is a resident of Amherst, since moving here from suburban Philadelphia two years ago and transferring into UMass last year. He has been drawing cartoons since "Popeye when I was 4 years old" and was the art editor of his weekly high school paper in Upper Darby, Pa.

WMUA will broadcast 'Burn down Babylon'

The Rasta movement sprang out of the thirties based upon the nationalist teachings of Marcus Garvey who told his people in Jamaica:

"Look to Africa when a black king shall be crowned for the day of deliverance is near."

In November 1930 Ras Tafari was crowned as the emperor of Ethiopia and took on the title Haile Selassie, King of Kings, Lord of Lords, Conquering Lion of the tribe of Judah. Some Jamaicans who had listened to Garvey began to consult their bibles.

Could this be the Saviour, the messiah of whom Garvey spoke? The Rasta Fari in Jamaican. The African in the New World. Dread in a Babylon.

In Burn Down Babylon; the Rasta Fari in Jamaican Society we bring you a close up examination of the Rasta man, his lifestyle, his religion and culture, and his potential as a revolutionary force within Jamaica.

This radio broadcast will be presented in two parts to appear Saturday, at 3 p.m. and Thursday April 15 at 11 p.m. on WMUA Radio, 91.1 FM.

A product of Black Mass Communications Project, this presentation we hope, will give you some good information and insight into nationalist movements in Jamaica.

Give a listen.

Ogala Sioux speaker leads off symposium

By PETER PENNIE
and JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

Chief Frank Fools Crow of the Oglala Souix Nation spoke last night at Chapin Auditorium on the Mt. Holyoke campus before some 200 persons. The speech kicked off a three-day Five-College Indian Symposium.

Fools Crow is the traditional Oglala Medicine Man and is the second youngest person in his tribe to become Chief, the youngest being Chief Crazy Horse.

According to Elaine La Riviere, Mt. Holyoke co-ordinator of the event, "Fools Crow is a man of sincerity and honesty, a man who possesses an enormous amount of dignity. The Oglala Holy Man is a sacred position with traditional duties and ceremonies involving adoption, rites, peace rituals, and tribal pow-wows."

Fools Crow attended last night's gathering of local and national Indian representatives despite the fact that this home in Pine Ridge, South Dakota had burned down Wednesday. Speaking in his tribal of "Lakota" and shaken by his personal tragedy he apologized for his short presentation. He said having made a committment to come to the five college area, he said he would have felt like a liar.

Fools Crow's speech was translated into English by Michael King, an Oglala Souix from South Dakota.

"The world is in trouble", said King, "because of world leaders, people who only think for themselves. The Indians shared. They were sympathetic with one another."

"We had trouble at Pine Ridge because we had a corrupted government, just like the United States government."

"The Indians never talked back", he said, "but now you'll have to listen. We understand what's going on and we don't like it."

In defense of the American Indian Movement (AIM) King said, "AIM was organized to protest maltreatment. It has been accused of everything under the sun. We are all good people." King explained how traditional signs appeared warning of the necessity to change our present corrupt policy. He reported on how the Indians had been self-sufficient before the invasion of Europeans and could be even now. "We have herbs for every illness", he said. "Some of the government doctors would like our medicine but there is fear that they would commercialize".

The final day of the celebration tomorrow will be a noon to dusk Pow-Wow held near UMass campus pond.

Stanley did not object to the motion substitution and there was little controversy over the issue.

Town Meeting member and UMass Community Coordinator Gerald Grady said University faculty, students and administrators have shown support for the proposed UMass site. "The question, he said, "is whether we in town have a qualified vote on the issue?"

Many Town Meeting members who spoke were in favor of the motion. One town meeting member, however, asked what authority UMass has in granting state property for the library and what authority does the town meeting have in approving the location.

A precinct six Town Meeting member, urged other members to defeat the motion.

Irwin Howard, member of the planning board supported the motion and said the board will boserve the library very carefully.

Linkletter condemns top actors in porno 'art'

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Entertainer Art Linkletter says he is disgusted with talented actors who are resorting to "shameful pornography" for movie roles.

The radio-television host said that 10 years ago pornography was use unknown actors, but the public became bored with those films.

"Now we have the spectacle of big-name stars making the cheap, sensational films. They're making a lot of money, but they'll wear out," he predicted.

Linkletter offered the comments in an interview Wednesday while visiting Springfield College, where he serves as a trustee.

He singled out two actors by name for censure.

"Warren Beatty in "Shampoo" is an exampie of a young man who at the height of his star powers has debased the whole business by putting on a movie with major celebrities that caters to the lowest common denominator of taste.

"Marlon Brando, in my opinion, is on a par with him. A star of that caliber doing "Last Tango in Paris' is, to me, disgusting."

Linkletter noted that of the next 47 films due to release in Hollywood, only four will carry a "G" general audience rating. But he said the heavy output of sexually explicit movies is the fault of the public, not the movie industry.

"The movie makers are businessmen. They're not trying to distort or demean the public taste. They're just catering to it.

"So when anybody asks me, 'Why is Hollywood doing this?' my answer is, 'Why are you people going to them?'"

Linkletter said the sex films will fade out, replaced by movies emphasizing violence. Eventually, though, the public will tire of those, too, and there will be a swing back to romance and idealism, he said.

Turning to other aspects of entertainment, Linkletter was critical of attempts to inject humor in television news shows.

"I think the recent custom of having newsmen be funny people, jokesters and talk-show hosts is deplorable," he said.

"First of all, they don't have the ability. Secondly, I think it's a strange mix. Too often they're caught with egg on their face.

Barefoot on the mark

So, the illustrious University of Massachusetts football squad has TWO physicians!!! Not one, but two!!!

Not only have they two physicians, but they also have an athletic trainer

WONDERFUL!! WONDERFUL!! WONDERFUL!!

I can see how their record was greatly improved by these men. If they didn't have those men, they'd probably go 0-11.

Just think, two physicians and a certified trainer ... and women's track can't even get shoes. I think that the athletic department better hire a couple of physicians for women's track too, because running barefoot does a hell of a job on your feet.

Dog smitten by 'man'

Thursday, April 24, at 10:30, a small black dog was violently assaulted by a "man" employed by Building Operations as a dog catcher. Dog exterminator seems more appropriate. I lodged a complaint with his employers and was informed that the man was doing his duty and was only treating the dog so badly because he had first been bitten. As I viewed the situation, the dog bit the "man" because he was being strangled. Who is right? I'm not sure, but a man who is a dog-catcher should be able to get a dog out of a building without choking it. And this was the second time I saw this man's hands around a yelping dog's throat. If anyone else sees or has seen any other incidents of this nature, please make a complaint to Building Operations, Room 225, in the Campus Center, so we can save a lot of dogs [and a lot of dog-lovers] all this senseless pain.

Tentative on tenure

For a lot of folks, mostly students of course, it's time to start job hunting again. Now, more than ever before, getting a job is harder than getting sense out of Whitmore. It should be comforting to know, however, that for many University employees, 'job-hunting' is an unknown concept. The administrative magic of tenure, adopted many years ago to protect faculty engaged in controversial teaching and research, now has become an umbrella that shelters incompetence and laxity.

What function does tenure serve in 1975? Consider that, in these invigorating times, tenure means "fat city" without real accountability, not a bad deal by any means. What motivation to perform can really exist if there is no threat of firing? We don't mean to imply that all tenured personnel are slacking off, because not all are. But those people who are really valuable to the University, who are performing creatively and usefully, don't need tenure to stay on board. Their performance is their guarantee of employment, hindered only by the plethora of tenured bodies standing in their path.

We have some tough decisions to make, with budget cuts, higher fees, and job shortages upon us. We need accountability and responsibility more than ever. Let's get rid of the dead wood [no pun intended]. If the dead wood has tenure, and much of it does, let's get rid of tenure. If this will require legislative or judicial action, let's get to it. If this University is to survive, it must be run with both accountability and credibility. The only way to achieve that goal is to make people responsible.

Dining Commons dishes out porcelain portions

I am writing in regard to an incident which occurred at Berkshire D.C. on April 15 at supper. I was eating a piece of cake, and I felt a sharp object in my mouth. Upon examination, I found it to be a piece of chipped porcelain, of which the D.C. dishes are made of. In the dish the cake was in, I found 2 more pieces of porcelain. I spoke to the supervisor as the manager was not in, who asked if I was injured. I was not. She then informed me that the porcelain dishes they use chip very easily. Then why do they use dishes that are potentially hazardous?

I realize that there are certain problems encountered by the D.C. when serving such a large number of people, but this incident, I find inexcusable.

CIC and the casualty cult

I am presently engaged in legal research concerning the Chicago Insurance Company. This is the company which insures UMass students who opted for the student health insurance plan, effective September 1, 1974. It is my contention that this company, which took over for another insurance company at the beginning of the school year, did not inform their policy holders, UMass students of many changes that took place from the policy of last year's insurance company, Federal Life and Casualty. As a result most students, including myself, were under the delusion that they would be covered for medical expenses, such as x-rays and blood tests. I am sure most students realize now that they will not pick up the tab unless a number of conditions are satisfied, such as having all your medical care completed either at the infirmary or at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. However, their policy was never clarified until the company issued a newsletter in March. In the meantime what happened to we UMies? We got shafted, that's what. Could everyone who has had to pay for their medical care out of their own pocket with the clear understanding that a particular problem would be covered by the Student Health plan, contact me. If our claims are just, then the possibility of a class action suit is extremely enticing.

More interest is a wise investment

With all the discussion of budget cuts and tight money, it's nice to see an opportunity for self investment. The UMass Student Federal Credit Union is one such opportunity. Membership is open to all students and provides the services of savings accounts, loans, and sale of food stamps.

The Credit Union is a direct result of the work of the Student Organizing Project and is the second of its kind in the country. President Peter Birnbaum terms its present state "very healthy."

While student unity is coming to the fore, economic unity is just beginning. The theory behind a student owned and operated Credit Union is that students, not corporations will gain the benefits from their own investments; something new and different in light of the amount of economic control held by large banks.

Through the Credit Union, students can obtain a slightly higher interest rate on savings, and lower interest on loans. All savings are insured by federal law.

In addition to the work of the SOP, the School of Business Administration is working with the Union; a move which brings education out of the classroom and into a "real life" situation.

The Credit Union, located at 166 Campus Center, represents a unique expression of student unity and the Collegian urges all students to look into it and invest in themselves.

What justice for native Americans?

By CAROL EPSTEIN

In the early months of 1973, a few events occurred that were to have a lasting effect on the Native American people. In late January there was a murder; in early February a demonstration; and February 27, was the beginning of the two month liberation of Wounded Knee. Through the judicial system, the Federal Government and several state governments are now attempting to subvert the recognition and freedom that the Indian people have been trying to regain since the white man first came to this continent.

Wesley Bad Heart Bull, a 21 year-old Oglala Lakhota, was stabbed to death outside a bar in Buffalo Gap, South Dakota, on January 21, 1973. On February 6, Sarah Bad Heart Bull went to Custer to meet with the state's attorney to protest the lenient second degree murder charge that Darld Schmitz, a white man, faced for murdering her son. Between 75 and 100 Native American people went to Custer that day in support of Sarah and to voice their objections to the South Dakota dual system of justice.

Before

The state police and tactical squad were in Custer to greet the caravan. When Sarah attempted to climb the steps of the courthouse, she was grabbed and choked by a peace officer. Bob High Eagle rushed forward to Sarah's rescue and was beaten back. A riot broke out along with a small fire in the courthouse, and another fire that burned the one-story Chamber of Commerce building to the ground. 22 people were indicted, among them was Sarah Bad Heart Bull. Shortly after that, Darld Schmitz was acquitted by an all white jury.

On April 25, 1974, Sarah, along with Bob High Eagle, Lou Beane, Ken Dahl and Dave Hill were on trial in Sioux Falls for "riot where arson is committed." That day, the defense was waiting for a State Supreme Court decision on a motion for extra peremptory challenges. When the defense lawyers refused to proceed with the voir dire, they were all cited for contempt by presiding judge Joseph Bottum. Ramon Roubideaux, the Indian attorney, was jailed and fined, and the two white attorneys were suspended from practice in the state. The judge relented the following day and reinstated the three attorneys. The spectators rose and cheered when Ramon entered the courtroom, and then, in violation of that sacred but tacit law, retained their seats when Judge Bottum entered. The judge was outraged and called in the Marshalls to remove the silently protesting spectators.

The defense was allowed only 14 spectators when court reconvened on April 30. 15 Lutheran Clergymen who had come to town for a convention and decided to stay for the much publicized trial, were also present. A few hundred Native Americans and white supporters were gathered outside of the Minnehaha County Courthouse, when the Sioux Falls tactical squad was called in to clear the courtroom of those spectators who refused to stand for the judge. Though the press was quickly ushered into the hallway at the admonition of the bailiff, the clergymen stayed inside. The tac squad entered the courtroom with their clubs swinging and immediately knocked down David Hill. A battle broke out and a chair was thrown through the window, at which point, the people outside of the courthouse, fearing for the safety of those inside, tried to force their way into the building. The doors were locked and armed police lined the halls, so they broke windows and tried to enter that way. Dave Hill, with blood streaming from one of his eyes, was carried out, and three Indian men lay handcuffed and bleeding on the third floor corridor of the courthouse. One of the Lutheran Clergymen, appalled at the display of excessive force on the part of the police, described the incident to the press as using a "shotgun against a flea."

Dave Hill, whose eye was permanently damaged, and Lou Beane were severed from the case. The other defendants were not so lucky. Their trial continued in the windowless Civil Defense Building on the outskirts of town and they were convicted — by an all white jury. Sarah was given 1-5 years; Bob and Ken, 5-7: All were denied bond pending appeal. Public pressure helped Sarah obtain her freedom after four months, but the two men are still in jail — and more people were indicted. 8 people were charged with riot and assault, and 5 for injury to a public building, as a result of the Sioux Falls incident.

Trial for the five "outside" defendants began about six weeks ago in the recently repaired Minnehaha County Courthouse, before Judge Braithewaite. After several defense motions for dismissal, the court ruled, May 5, that it was impossible for the defendants to receive a fair trial at this time, or even a year from now. It was a great victory for the Native American people and their supporters, but we remember that there still remain dozens of Wounded Knee defendants, 18 Custer defendants, and 8 more Sioux Falls defendants. What kind of justice locks up Sarah Bad Heart Bull and myriads of other innocent people, and allows the assailants of Dave Hill and the murderer of Wesley Bad Heart Bull to go free?

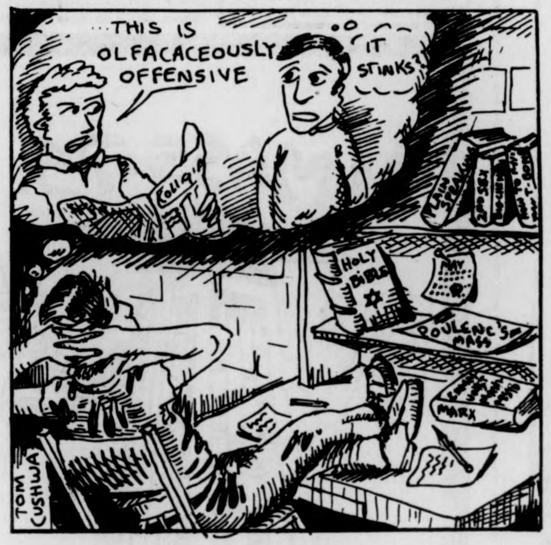
The Talmud and me

This is my last column of the year, my swan song. Those who are looking for the customary reactionary apologetica will be disappointed, for there will be none today. There instead may possibly be human interest and meditative thought.

I've learned much from writing and have had some very interesting experiences, both good and bad. About the most embarrassing thing that happened to me was the time early in the semester when I called someone I knew, a "Communist," after she had told me why she had disliked my column. I was trying to be funny. You know, ha ha, "Anyone who dislikes my views just can't be anything but a Communist." Well, she thought I was serious, and complained to my editor. I was astounded that she ever thought I was serious, but was even more amazed at my two-fold stupidity, both for now knowing her as well as I thought, and for not appreciating the responsibilities of my public position.

It was a public position, a completely unique experience, as they say. Because it was a public position, I wrote everything very carefully, lest I make a public fool of myself. This meant I had to think very critically and deeply. This helped both my thinking and writing abilities, the latter of which I believe showed improvement as the semester progressed.

The actuality of writing had other effects. The column was a conversation starter among acquaintances. It was fun to walk up to strangers reading the column and asked what they thought of what the nut had to say this week. It was fun to see responses to the column subsequently appear in The Collegian, even if they were nasty, And they weren't always nasty. The favorable comments were read with a gratefulness that is impossible to describe. And it was satisfying to see a prediction come true. A couple of weeks after I had augured that the new Portuguese regime would close the Portuguese Azores to U.S. military transport in event of another Mid-east war, the new regime did just that. I feel very smug about that one, but I shouldn't. It's not that I'm so intelligent, but that Communists can be so tediously predictable.



I would like to close with a remarkable thing I heard in February while gathering material for my column. It is a midrash, or anecdote, from the Babylonian Talmud, translated into the journal Judaism, winter 1970, Page 40. It could be entitled "God's Only Mistake." The place of the description is Jerusalem, and the time is just prior to the Babylonian Captivity. God had meant to strike dead the people of Jerusalem for their iniquities, but sent someone (Ezekial 9:4) through "all Jerusalem and mark a cross on the foreheads of all who deplore and disapprove of all the filth practiced in it — in other words, "all the good people were to be spared." At that moment, the indignant (heavenly) prosecutor steps forward in the Heavenly Court (And the midrash proceeds.).

Prosecutor: Lord, wherein are these (marked ones) different from those (the rest)?

God: These are wholly righteous men, while those are wholly wicked.
Prosecutor: But Lord, they (the righteous men) had power to protest, but did not.
God: It was known to me that had they protested, they would not have been heeded.
Prosecutor: But Lord, if it was (sic) revealed to Thee, was it revealed to them? Accordingly, they should have protested and incurred scorn for the Holy Name, and have been ready to suffer blows as did the prophets suffer from Israel."
And God concludes that He was in error and that all should have been destroyed, for none protested evil.

The lesson is obvious. The lesson is that it is not enough — in fact, that it is nothing — just to have good thoughts, unless they are accompanied by the action which the thoughts — conscience — demands. Nor is this a concept limited to Judaism. It is fundamental to Roman Catholic belief, as a careful reading of Martin Luther will show. In fact, it is an idea universal to man.

As we all go away from UMass for the summer, it would be very well to leave with the midrash in mind. In the meanwhile, God bless everybody, and have a good summer.

Eight ball in the pocket

"May you live in interesting times."
— Chinese Curse

Interesting times, indeed, but I'm beginning to see why it was considered a curse to live in times such as these. People don't learn anything from them.

A case in point. I happened to be at a meeting of the Brown House Council in Sylvan last Monday. The main issue on the agenda was the question of how to allocate an empty room in the dormitory. There were two groups vying for the space. One had already presented a proposal which called for a joint Third World-Men's and Women's Awareness Center. The other group wanted to use the space for a pool table. Yes, you heard me right, a pool table. As you may have guessed, the group was represented exclusively by white males. Many of them were residents of the first floor of the dormitory, and wore t-shirts which proclaimed their solidarity. They said "Hard Core First" on the front.

So the debate began. One "Hard Core" pool table supporter raised his hand, and with the characteristic smile which for years has been the badge of bigoted condescending, male superiority asked an Awareness Center supporter what use he, as a while male, would get out of the center. He went on to state that when "Women and other minorities" are put together, it leaves poor, helpless, oppressed white males like himself in the real minority. Really, how does one deal with that kind of intellect?

Another favorite argument of the "Hard Core" gang was that more people would get use out of the table than out of an Awareness Center. One eight-ball was heard to remark to the assembly that he didn't see what use a lot of people would get out of "that stuff." We can only assume that by "that stuff" he meant cultural awareness. We can also assume that if he needed to ask the question he needs the awareness more than most people. I was beginning to think that "Hard Core" stood for "Hard Core Ignorant." My fears were confirmed when the vote came.

The actual motion was worded to deny the space to the Awareness Center, not to allocate it for a pool table. When the vote came it was "yes" by a solid margin, and the Awareness Center went down in flames to the "Hard Core." When a motion to give the room to the Awareness Center until such time as a pool table was obtained was raised for consideration, an argument against it was that "it would be easier to bar them (note use of the word 'them,' famous racist equivalent for 'the niggers') now than to throw them out later." That motion was also defeated. It should be noted that two Assistant Heads of Residence voted against the Center. These are supposed to be aware people. A pox on their jobs.

Fortunately, the vote was not final or binding. The Area Director has control of the space, and will hopefully use it to help meet Sylvan's Affirmative Action needs. The "Hard Core" will be left with the Campus Center and a neighboring dorm to quench their insatiable lust for billards, and a free membership ROAR, compliments of me (if their parents haven't already enrolled them. Someone must be responsible for their lack of sensitivity.

Incidentally, there's a pro-busing march on Boston May 17th. You should be able to get details of it in the media next week. Be there, if you care. All others meet in the new Brown House Pool Room.

What about the others?

By PAUL BRADLEY

Much has been said over the last few weeks about unity. Unity with fellow students, unity with the faculty and staff, and unity with other economically struggling groups.

At the same time, the educational-economic situation in this state has been boiled down by the media to a confrontation between a new Governor and the politically tried and tested President of the University of Massachusetts. A good match to be sure, and easy to see and understand. This view has been accepted by many involved in the whole affair, including, apparently, Messrs. Dukakis and Wood. Boston publications have just now begun to pay attention to what has been happening on campus.

Precious little attention has been paid to the numerous state and community colleges who are also funded by the state, and would also stand to suffer through overall budget cuts.

Nothing has been reported as to the reactions of the administrations, students, and faculties of these schools. Why hasn't the head of Bridgewater State or Salem State, for example, reacted to budget cuts that would have a bearing on them?

When doling out cutbacks in state funded higher education, the most expensive institution will naturally be looked to first. That is this university. But this state also supports several smaller colleges and community colleges whose total enrollment approaches that of UMass. One would think that there is great cost there too, and that cutbacks would be assessed there too.

But President Wood has been the only administrator of higher education to react publicly to this whole mess. The Chancellor of the Boston campus — which desperately needs funding for growth — has been conspicuously silent.

Those figures released recently that said the state of Massachusetts ranked low in per student spending applies for all the state supported institutions, not only UMass.

Students at the smaller state colleges would also face doubled tuition and cutbacks in programs. They would have to cope, like us, with a 10 per cent cutback in inflationary times.

If there is to be any real unity, then it would seem that people at these smaller state schools should join President Wood at the forefront of the battle. And students at the other schools should voice their opposition to the Governor.

UMass at Amherst is not in this alone. The whole public education system is at stake, and it is time that some of the other rank and file involved let their voices be heard, whether in favor or against. That is where effective unity, in this struggle lies.

Chorale set to appear in Bowker

The University Chorale and Chamber Singers will be presented by the department of music on Sunday at 3:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The groups will premier "Memory" written by the renowned composer Philip Benzanson. Benzanson was the head of the music department at UMass until his retirement in 1973. "Memory" is the last work he wrote before his recent death in March of this year. The piece is set to a text of poems by President Abraham Lincoln.

A second work being presented is Francis' Poulene's Mass in G major, which was dedicated to his father's death. It features soprano soloists Catherine Hall, Patricia Leary, and Susan Eigen. Faculty accompanists will be Leopold Teraspulsky — cello, Laura Campbell — horn, Julian Olevsky — violin.

Program prepares students as lawyer aides

Vincent DeBenedetto's one word description of the Division of Continuing Education's Legal Assistant Training Program (LATP) was: "Tough!"

Why? "Because you have to work as if that's all you were doing, and most of us have full-time jobs as well, plus families." The program is provided through the Division of Continuing Education at UMass and given at Springfield Technical Community College. The one-year LATP is designed to give its students enough basic knowledge of law to enable them to function as lawyer's aides.

A legal assistant, also called a paralegal, can screen clients, does some of the leg work and research for a lawyer, or administers a law office. A paralegal not only frees the lawyer to do work that legally only lawyers can do, but he or she can cut the cost of law practice as well.

Vincent DeBenedetto's present job borders on the law. He works 44 hours a week for a food chain store, collecting on illegitimate checks, which involves him in court cases. He also takes four courses with LATP, plus an independent study course at Quinsigamond Community College in Worcester because he is still working on his Bachelor of General Studies degree through UMass Continuing Education.

The Massachusetts Paralegal Association (MPLA) according to Mary Lou Izard, another LATP student, will hopefully be a determining factor in the direction of the paralegal profession.

WFCR (88.5 FM) presents programs on Sunday which may help you to prepare for final exams and papers...

At 1:00 p.m. PACIFICA presents "I.F. Stone at UCLA". The Dean of America's muckrakers speaks on the abuse of U.S. Intelligence Agencies and the Rockefeller panel's report on the CIA at home and abroad.

Earplay '75 follows with "No Knocking On People's Doors" by Katherine Kennedy. A vivid illustration of what happens to a human being who has been institutionalized in an insane asylum and is then released, after 40 years, to the "real" world.

At 7:00 p.m. The Black Book pays a tribute to Langston Hughes, known as "The Poet Laureate of the Negro Race" and credited with the greatest literary output of any Afro-American writer.

Ford Hall Forum at 8:30 p.m. presents "Religion in America: The Next 200 Years," with Dr. Harvery Cox, theologian, author and Professor of Divinity, Harvard University.

WFCR at 88.5 FM is a National Public Radio station broadcasting from Amherst. It is a joint project of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the UMass, with additional contributions from our listener-sponsors.

Food stamp session offered

Food stamp consumer "advocates" will be trained at a two-day student-sponsored conference today and tomorrow at UMass.

Four UMass students are offering the sessions to train food stamp recipients and potential recipients to go out into communities of Hampshire and Franklin Counties as volunteers informing other recipents or potential recipients of the program.

There's no fee for workshops or lunch for conference participants. Workshops will be from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today on the ninth floor of the Campus Center, and from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. tomorrow in the Public Health Auditorium, Morrill Science Center.

SAC meeting about budget

The Student Action Committee (SAC) is alive and flourishing and will be meeting today at 4:00 p.m. in the student senate council chambers. Discussion will center on budget cuts and forming a committee that will travel to Boston to meet with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis. After the discussion a vote will be taken.

1975 Campus Womens Conference produced 9 programmatic outcomes

By ANN EMERY
Staff Reporter

This is the concluding part of a five part series reporting the results of the 1975 University Women's Conference, which was held January 21-25 at UMass. Part Five contains the impact and outcomes from the Conference.

By the end of the University Women's Conference, over 700 people had participated in 120 workshops within a 5 day period. What came out of it all? In addition to the issues and recommendations from the workshops, some specific programmatic outcomes can be listed:

- several new courses with a Feminist focus being planned
- undergraduate women's counseling collective formed
- a new Feminist counseling group formed
- a Valley Lesbian Conference planned
- UMass Women's Communication network formed
- Feminist Environmentalist group formed
- departmental caucuses formed
- Socialist Feminist group expanded
- ad hoc support groups arranged

The final burst of conference energy created the University Women's Caucus as a coordinated and visible group of women, oriented toward organization, prodding, investigation, and action. The pressing issue was the pending budget decisions throughout the University, and the implications for women's programming and women staff, faculty, and students. An action planning committee was designated at the end of the Conference to coordinate the first gathering of the Caucus.

The Caucus held its first meeting on February 17, 1975. Over 50 women attended. Representatives from organizations on campus which particularly focus on women were present to outline current activities and crucial funding concerns.

The immediate result of this meeting was the organization into four task groups to investigate the budget and decision-making machinery of the University, and to formulate policy and strategies.

It would be misleading to suggest that the sum of the conference is reflected in the outcomes reflected in the report. There are probably as many outcomes as there were people and workshops. The total is immeasurable, in the friends made, the consciousnesses raised, in the celebrating, planning, steps taken focusing on every aspect of University life for women.

The report does not presume to speak for all women or all groups of women on campus. Nor does it attempt to be a comprehensive survey or statement of needs, issues, or recommendations. Rather, it serves to document an unusual and important event, to demonstrate what is possible, to confirm what exists, and to highlight what is still necessary for women at the University of Massachusetts.

Copies of the report can be obtained at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall.

University Women's Caucus gets first financial backing

The University Women's Caucus, a network of women from all areas of the university community which formed out of the University Women's Conference last January, is actively addressing a variety of issues which concern women at UMass.

The caucus received its first financial backing from the Graduate Student Senate last Monday night.

The Caucus has also approved a position paper which was endorsed by 300 women from a broad base of faculty, administrators, students and staff. The paper, which was also endorsed by the Student Senate, the Graduate Senate and the Faculty Sub-Committee on the Status of Women, was sent to Governor Michael Dukakis, UMass President Robert Wood, Chancellor Randolph Bromery, and others.

Black Scientist Society presents Third Annual Honoraria in Herter

The Black Scientist Society of UMass will be presenting its Third Annual Honoraria. This event will be held on May 9, and May 10. The theme of this year's program will be "Contemporary Health in Black America". The program will feature Dr. Robert Murray of Howard University who will speak on the topic of "Genetic Screening." Immediately following there will be a reception.

The event will be held on the first floor of Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m. Friday night. May 10 will consist of a series of workshops also dealing with the theme "Contemporary Problems in Black America." The workshops will be held in Herter Hall rooms 210-219. There will be a banquet following the workshops.

All those who attend the workshops will be presented an invitation to the banquet free of charge. The program will be extremely beneficial for the participants who come, to learn and exchange knowledge concerning their community and its scientific nature. Everyone is cordially invited to attend these informative events.

Magid also thought that the student movements of the sixties were dominated by male leadership cliques, whereas today eliticism was virtually absent. He said: "The University Town Meetings showed the broad base of student interest. There are different chairpeople each time and individuals are not glorified."

Fischer, former student at the University of Connecticut and Columbia University, basically agreed with Magid, but added: "You can't read the sixties looking for answers for the seventies. Many single issue gains were achieved in the last ten years: students have more input now, are sitting on the Board of Directors of universities, third world, women's and other minority programs have gained more recognition and funding. But the basic power relationships have not changed. And it's these long term issues, students are working on now."

Fischer stressed that students are appearing "less disruptive" now and are "adapting society's methods to change society." Asked about charges that apathy has become rampant among students, Fischer said: "It's a myth in a lot of way. Students have simply realized that change isn't that easy. People are trying to catch their breath after an important period in history (the Vietnam war)."

Magid said, if students saw that they could win their case, they would come out and act. "Apathy," he said, "is situational, it is only an admission of powerlessness."

Fischer, when asked about the problems of establishing a student union, replied: "A student union has to be a creature of the people it serves. It must be student controlled from start to finish. We can't afford to set up a mini-Whit more here. When a student enters this university, he has to agree to a contract he or she had no influence in drawing up. A student union would see to it that all viewpoints are considered in that contract. It truly has to be an organization of, by and for the students."

Fischer was optimistic that a student union could be set up by October of this year, before SGA President John O'Keefe resigned. (O'Keefe recently elected said he will resign.) Fischer pointed out that there were two models for a student union: The first would be of the "labor union type". This kind, Fischer said, was "not very acceptable, because the leadership tends to be removed from its constituency, and we need close contact."

The alternative union structure would involve a decentralized union, which would form councils around important disciplines and concerns.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by stella wilder

Friday, May 9 — Born today, you expect a great deal of other people. Those who work with or for you must learn to tow the line or forfeit their good image in your eyes. On the other hand, you ask of others no more than you are willing to give yourself; thus, those for whom you work can be assured of receiving a full day's labor in return for a full day's pay. You possess a highly developed sense of justice and need only learn something of human psychology to become a wise leader of men who has the trust and confidence of his followers.

You not only enjoy family life and relationships, you need the strong emotional ties that only families can give. For you, an early marriage is clearly indicated -- and, in fact, will be highly beneficial, for it is through marriage that you will learn valuable lessons of cooperation, lessons which, if they go unlearned, will be sorely missed. For unless you learn to cooperate, you will be subject to adversities throughout your days.

What you believe in you will fight for. You have within you the strength of mind to be a formidable foe to any who stand in your way -- and it is this same strength of mind that can make you a highly prized friend to those who you feel have earned your loyalty and devotion. Once you have formed an opinion, you are very much inclined to stick to it, for you find it extremely difficult to admit to yourself or to anyone else that you might have been mistaken in the first place -- which is a trait you should try to overcome.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Saturday, May 10

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Enter enthusiastically into whatever activities loved ones suggest. This is an excellent time to get back into spouse's good graces.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't spoil the plans for the day by giving in to a mood of depression. Bear in mind the feelings of those who will have to make the change with you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Follow through with plans for self-improvement. Get at-home chores out of the way early in the day; get plenty of relaxation at evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — It is important that you be witty (but not sarcastic), well-groomed, and strong of mind. Others take delight in your efforts to please them.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Associations with others, particularly with high-ranking members of the community, should fare well today. Realize a personal objective at evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If it becomes necessary for you to change your plans for today's activities, do so without resentment or complaint. The day ends well.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Work toward achieving the ideal in your relationships with others. In such a way will you endear yourself to many -- and make material gains as well.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The culmination of a community enterprise is your reward for work well done, energy well spent in the recent past. Accept credit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A Saturday for entertaining -- or being entertained. Don't be surprised should a close friend disappoint you late in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The outlook is for a day of reasonable pleasures. Don't expect to be overjoyed by anything -- but don't expect to be saddened either.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you mix a little pleasure with Saturday business dealings, you may be able to emerge at day's end with both profit and a friend.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Romance may well mark this as a very special day. Put -- and keep -- your best foot forward. Accept new authority on the home front.

Men's crew seeks Dad Vail crown; hope to keep National Championship

By BOB NORTON

The UMass men's crew takes to the road today in anticipation of winning the Dad Vail for the third year in succession. After having a rather rocky season, there would be considerable consolation in defending their title at Philadelphia Saturday.

Spirits were flying high heading into the first race in April: a new coach, a new rowing style, a rewarding fall season, and seven hard months of work. Heads were turned when Trinity upset UMass by 1.5 seconds. UMass then stepped into a different realm of rowing when Coach Bill Mahoney scheduled opponents like Harvard, Brown, and Northeastern. They took their lumps with losses to all three, and garnered something to think about.

At this time the varsity eight has beaten two schools (Marist College, W.P.I.) and lost of five — three top division I crews and two top Dad Vail schools. The team boasts the return of but three oarsmen from last year's championship eight, parts of a third place J.V., and a national championship freshman boat. With that you would dig fairly deep into the psych of sport to find a logic for the team's performance. Nevertheless they head to Philadelphia for three races in two days hoping to prove that after a confusing spring, they still have what it takes to be the best of Division II and the Dad Vail.

UMass looked impressive (if that's possible) in being edged by Northeastern University. Signs of jelling appeared — a lot more of their potential came to the surface; it was both a frustrating and encouraging loss. On Saturday at about 4:30 p.m. the crew will know for sure if the inspiration was worth it.

Johnson, James now men gymnasts' captains

By BILL DOYLE

Members of the UMass men's gymnastics team have elected Roy Johnson and Joel James co-captains for the 1975-76 season, Tom Dunn, departing men's coach announced yesterday.

Johnson, who is returning for his fifth year at UMass because he has a year of eligibility left, served as one of the team's co-captains this past season with Bill Brouillet. A marblehead native, Johnson was the team's number two all-around man behind Brouillet.

James, from Longmeadow, will be entering his second year at UMass after transferring here last year from Holyoke Community College. He is a high bar specialist.

Dunn expressed pleasure with the team's selections.

"Johnson did a heck of a job for us last year," he said. "He kept everyone working at the pace that they should have been working.

"James had a tough year this past season but he finally got his competitive psyche together at the end of the year and he finished the season well by qualifying for the E.I.G.L. finals."

Dunn added that James is in the gym six days a week for just about the entire school year, so he must have the determination and spirit necessary to be captain.

Johnson finished ninth out of twelve in a recent USGF eastern regional trial.

JV mitters, stickers have field days

McKay's men excel again

By TONY CHAVES

Yesterday must have been Mark Wyner Day, and to celebrate it Wyner put on an awesome slugging display leading the JV batsmen over Worcester Academy, 15-1.

Wyner started his show in the bottom of the first with an RBI triple. That and Bavel Cummings' subsequent triple helped to put the Minutemen ahead, 5-0.

The offense didn't stop there. In the bottom of the third Wyner struck again with another RBI triple and he scored a moment later to make the score UMass 7, Worcester 1. The Worcester run was unearned.

Wyner capped his show with a three run homer over the 375 foot mark in right center in the bottom of the fourth. After he took a called third strike in the seventh, his mates kidded him about all the running making him too tired to swing the bat.

UMass scored three more in the sixth and two in the seventh to account for the final score.

Tom Nigro started the game and lasted until the eighth when Coach McKay began making substitutions.

There was speculation in the dugout that Nigro could have had a no-hitter today if he hadn't been so wild in the early going. As it was, Worcester collected only two hits in the game and scored its only run in the second.

The baseballers only error came on a ground ball that was so slowly hit Scott Aye had to hurry his throw to Wyner at first base who was unable to dig the ball out.

With yesterday's romp the JV's improved their record to 13-1. After two years for Coach McKay their cumulative record is 24-4.

Chimps: all over Amherst

By BILL EDELSTEIN

The JV lacrosse team spent the better part of yesterday afternoon teaching the fundamentals of the game they play to Amherst College, and, after the laughter subsided, the final tally read: Teachers-13, Pupils-2.

Freshman Mike Gongus was head professor with an incredible total of six goals, five in the first half, which served as a visual aid during the Chimps teachings.

UMass broke the game open in the second quarter on lessons by Larry Heaton, Paul "Pit" Martin, Fran Yung and Gongus (3).

Heaton's goal, which staked the Chimps to a 3-0 lead, came during a man-up situation and was one of the few power play scores that UMass netted. The Chimps had numerous man advantages, as the officials' flags went flying so often that they had to refuel between each quarter, but the good guys managed to convert on Heaton's tally. "Our man-up team played poorly," noted UMass' coach Russ Kidd.

Although Gongus' third goal (the Chimps' fourth) was the culmination of a very pretty fast break, his fourth marker (UMass' sixth) was by far the most aesthetic of the afternoon. After taking a pass directly in front of the Lord Jeffs' net, with his back to said net, Gongus dumped the ball behind his posterior and into the goal. The maneuver greatly thrilled the fans in the open air lecture hall behind Boyden. To the gentlemen from Amherst, though, it was just more homework to catch up on until next year.

Play centered in and about the Lord Jeffs' net for three quarters of the class time, before the Chimps unloaded their bench in the fiscal stanza in order to find out exactly how quickly Amherst had learned. The boys from across town proved to be very able students as they seized the opportunity by scoring two goals to UMass' none.

CHIMP CHATTER — Yesterdays "game" closed out the JV's season with a record of 7-1. The only loss was a 12-10 heart-breaker to Yale. The coach was pleased with his Chimps' performance on the season, and added, "It was a fun team to coach."

Crewwomen set for Easterns

by TERESA HANAFIN

With an excellent season record, consistent performances, and a third-place seeding firmly in hand, the Women's Crew team takes on the best of the eastern women's crew teams Sunday, May 11 in the Eastern Association of Women's Rowing Colleges (EAWRC) Sprints in Middlefield, Connecticut at 9:00 a.m.

The varsity heavyweight eight race will feature 18 schools, divided into three 1000-meter heats of six boats each.

Top seedings have gone to Yale, Radcliffe, UMass, Princeton, MIT, Wisconsin, Syracuse, and Connecticut College, in that order.

UMass' heat will go off the line at 11:00. Included in their it are URI, Conn. College, Princeton, Dartmouth, and Barnard College.

According to the seedings, UMass and Princeton should qualify out of their heat. But, as coach Bob Spousta put it, "anything can happen."

UMass has a very good chance at winning the heat. "We'll have to row aggressively right from the start," emphasized Spousta. "Just because we're rated third doesn't mean we can take it easy. But we can be competitive and show that the ratings aren't a fluke."

"We've had some good practices, in which we've been moving faster than ever," he continued. "We have a very good chance to throw a big challenge at the top seeds like Yale and Radcliffe."

The JV boat will be entered in the novice 8 event with Rose Sellew's beginners. They will race as such because they are all first year rowers.

"If they can row like they did in the last half of last week's race against MIT, and get a fast start, they could be very competitive," claims Spousta.

Both the JV and third boat will be racing against Cornell, BU, New Hampshire, Wesleyan, and Wisconsin at 1:00.

According to Spousta, there's going to have to be the "hardest effort of the season from each person."

"But the team should be optimistic," he said. "They've been rowing consistently well. At these championships, they can be super".

Near perfect once again

Using his famed "Onion pitch", intramural hurler Bob Gilbert came within two batters of throwing his second perfect game when he no-hit the Spiders, leading the Stumptail Macaquets to a 6-0 victory in the campus playoffs yesterday afternoon.

Gilbert walked one and one batter reached on an error in the second inning of the game that sent the Macaquets into the semifinals of the tournament.

Dunn done as gymnastics coach

By BILL DOYLE

Citing greater opportunity, increased salary, and security, UMass men's gymnastics Tom Dunn announced yesterday that he will leave UMass to become assistant gymnastics coach next year at his alma mater, Penn State.

Dunn was the subject of a major controversy over whether or not the Athletic department was going to re-hire him. He had been paid at UMass out of a trust fund for his three years but the athletic department announced last spring that this means of payment could not continue.

The athletic department at first said that only a part time coach would be hired for the 1975-76 season but a month ago it reconsidered and offered a full-time position to Dunn as gymnastics coach and diving coach of the men's and women's swim teams.

Dunn said that under the new proposal, he still would have been paid out of the trust fund and that his salary would have been increased.

The departing mentor said that he decided to go to Penn State because "the opportunity was too good to pass up." He said that he would be assistant coach with the chance to become head coach after a year, when the present coach, Gene Wettstone, retires.

A former parallel bar All-American for Penn State, Dunn said that although there is no guarantee that he would get the head coaching position when Wettstone retires, he still would be paid $4,500 more as assistant coach at Penn State than he was paid at UMass for being head coach.

"The assistant coaching position is permanent so I'll have the security that was lacking at UMass," Dunn said. "Plus, Penn State is the best place in the country to coach gymnastics. It has tradition and a solid, well established gymnastics program. The athletic department said that they would try to match Penn State's offer financially, but I couldn't pass up the opportunity."

Dunn said that if it weren't for the Penn State offer, he probably would have stayed at UMass.

"I enjoyed coaching here and I learned a lot," said Dunn, who had a three year coaching record of 27-8 at UMass. "But I didn't like the instability of the future of the program and of my position. It was frustrating."

Athletic Director Frank McInerny said he was disappointed that Dunn was leaving and that he regretted it but he couldn't blame him for not passing up the opportunity.

"We plan to hire a full-time replacement as gymnastics coach," McInerny said. "We have a continuing commitment to the program."

Dunn said that he and the team have recommended assistant coach Bob Koenig to be hired as next year's head coach. Koenig said that he will meet with the athletic department today to decide whether or not he will be hired.

At least one member of the team has said that Dunn's leaving may cause him to transfer to another school. Steve Marks, who qualified for this year's nationals in vaulting, said that Dunn's exist and financial conditions may force his departure to Southern Illinois or Indiana State.

Recruiting hasn't been too successful, according to Dunn, because UMas couldn't promise recruits anything due to the uncertainty of whether Dunn would be back.

"The team will lack depth next year," the coach said. "Especially if Marks leaves."

Dunn explained that it is too late in the year for the university to conduct a thorough search for a replacement.

He reasoned that even though Koenig would be working on his dissertation next year and thus would be available to only coach gymnastics and not diving, he would be offered the position because of the lateness in the year.

McInerny said that the department plans to hire an assistant coach in addition to a head coach for next year.

Dunn said that by going to Penn State he would be paid more than what both he and wife (Debbie, a French teaching assistant at UMass) were making combined.

Gorillas plan rebound against MIT

By SCOTT HAYES

Many followers of the UMass lacrosse team may feel that the season ended Wednesday afternoon in Providence, as Brown stopped Garber's Gorillas 15-8 to clinch the New England championship. But according to coach Dick Garber, "The toughest part of the season will be coming back after the Brown game." The stickmen return to action tomorrow, as they travel to MIT for a 2:00 p.m. confrontation.

"This game's no different than any other one," Garber stated. MIT holds a 4-7 record and is coached by former UMass sticker Walt Alessi. Alessi captained the 1968 UMass lacrosse squad and won All-America honors as a defenseman. In his first game as coach of the Engineers, Alessi's players topped Rochester 12-8 to snap a 28-game losing streak at MIT.

MIT is enjoying a better season than in recent years. Harvard bested MIT 17-15 earlier in the season and the Engineers were nipped by Springfield 15-14 in another tight contest.

UMass easily won last year's clash by a 19-3 score. MIT has been a high-scoring team this season, however, and goalie Frank Singer is capable of making key saves. Singer stopped 29 shots against the Gorillas last spring and through eight games, the MIT netminder had a total of 159 saves, good for a 19.9 saves per game average.

The Gorillas suffered numerous bumps and bruises in their disappointing loss to Brown, but the team is relatively healthy.

"I'd like to make sure we finish on a strong note. After all, this is a good lacrosse team; one of the better one's we've had," commented the lacrosse coach.

BEHIND THE NET — Jeff Spooner and Billy O'Brien remain atop the UMass scoring statistics. Spooner has netted 24 goals and added 28 assists for an impressive total of 52 points. O'Brien has scored 10 goals and picked up 29 assists for 39 points.

The Gorillas are 7-3, with two games remaining after tomorrow. The team makes its last home appearance next Wednesday against Springfield and ends the season at Middlebury.

The 15-8 score of the Brown game didn't tell the whole story as UMass outshot the Bruins 54-40. It was just a matter of putting shots on net and getting the breaks, according to Garber.

One possible reason for the lacrosse team's fourteenth place ranking in the national poll is the balance among the country's top teams. Close competition between the top four or five teams and little separation of the next ten teams reflects the improving caliber of play in college lacrosse, but the situation failed to work in the Gorillas' favor.

Trackers home

By MIKE BERGER

Just as the Dartmouth meet earlier in the track season was determined by four points, coach Ken O'Brien and his trackmen also expect Saturday's 1:00 p.m. Llewelyn Derby Track meet against Northeastern to be closely contested.

Northeastern won the Indoor New Englands by 15 points and were second in the Outdoor Track Championships last season. "They are exceptionally strong in the throwing and distance events and as a team have good depth," notes Coach O'Brien.

In the shotput, Northeastern's Lenny Rao, Ted Dupont, and Bob Hacket are rated 1, 7, 9 respectively in New England. Rao and Hacket are also rated highly in the discus. Dov Djerassi is New England's No. one hammer thrower and is also known for his strength in the shot.

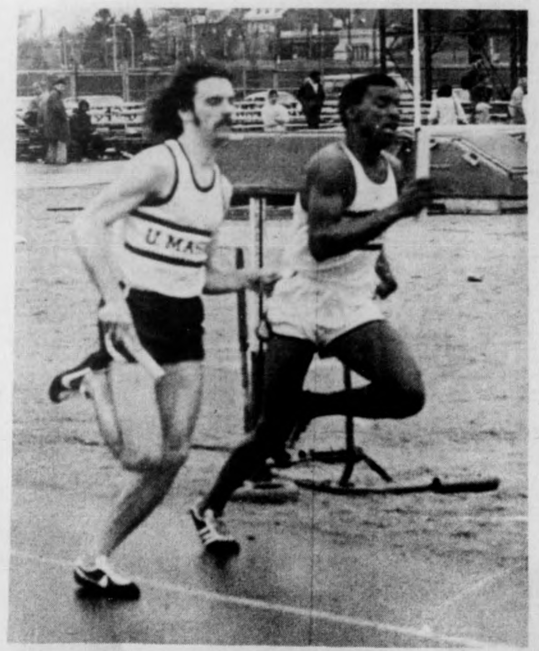
UMass' Chris Farmer, Devin Croft, and Frank Carroll should find the mile competition steep as they go against Northeastern's Ken Flanders, John Flora, and Mike Buckley. Scribner of Northeastern also competes in the mile, having run 4:10 to be New England champ as of last year.

The 880 race should also be no slouch as Kurt Stollel, with a 1:53.6 and Mike Hickey 1:55.8 best time will go against UMass' Jim Hunt, Steve Ridge, Harry Kelly, Peter Bloom, and Mike Hanson. All of them have hit 1:55 this season.

UMass, however, has a definite strength in the jumps and hurdles. The only opposition should possibly come from Northeastern's Walter Martin in the long jump and Vic Olayas in the 400-intermediate hurdles.

The 220 and mile relay feature two of the more competitive events of the day. UMass' Tom Beland is pitted against Fred Frelow of Northeastern, both have run personal bests of 22.1 for the 220, earning ratings of eighth and ninth in NE respectively. Precise execution of the baton may determine the outcome of the mile relay. UMass is slightly the underdog here with a best time of 3:19.4 compared to Northeastern's 3:19.1.

After reviewing Wednesday's decisive smashing of U.R.I. coaches O'Brien and Muska are extremely impressed with the performances of George Innis-javelin, Andy Levy-2 mile, Chet Mysliwicz-mile, Ted Power-pole vault, Mark Healy-440 intermediate hurdles and Russ Coffey-220.



Harry Kelley runs even in a relay earlier this year. The UMass tracksters will be running at home in a key meet versus Northeastern tomorrow.

UMass trails URI by four in quest for golf nationals

By RON ARENA

After one day of competition at Hanover Country Club in New Hampshire, the UMass golf team finds itself in fourth place, four strokes behind the leader, URI, in their quest for a berth in the June 25-28 Nationals at Ohio State.

Rhode Island's surprising 304 leaves them three strokes in front of a pair of opponents, Harvard and Dartmouth, which both carded 309's for the day. UMass came next in the ten-team field with a 308 total.

Rick Olson and Howie Terban both shot 76's to pace UMass on the par-70 course at Dartmouth. Olson, a junior, had commented prior to the competiton about playing in the most important match of the year, saying "More pressure will be on us, but I don't mind. I like playing under pressure, and I think I do my best under those conditions." Olson, as reflected in his score, kept his word.

Terban, who along with Joe Artman are the only two seniors in the field for UMass, had one of his best competition rounds this year. Fran Gaudette, the Minuteman coach, commenting on Terban's play, said "He's been playing well the last couple of days, and we really needed a good round from him.

Artman, and freshman Glen Sullivan each came in with identical scores of 78, while John Lasek suffered with his worst score of the season, an 82.

Normally, Lasek can be depended on for a sub-80 round, but yesterday his score ballooned after hitting three balls out of bounds. He has been the most consistent golfer on the team throughout the season, and a good round will be needed today from the junior.

Low medalist honors for the day went to Dartmouth's Jerry Daly. Daly, and All-American from Middlebury, Connecticut, scored a 35-34-69 to pace the individual pack.

TEE TIME...After UMass came Boston College (309), Providence (310), UNH (317), UConn (317), Yale (320), and finally Fairfield (322).

Gaudette prophesized a 298 as the magic number for his team to score today to capture a berth. Through their "dedication", he feels they can succeed. "These guys are really dedicated and they really want this bad," he noted. For proof, he revealed that the competition ended at 3:30 yesterday, and the players immediately practiced to regain their form. Olson "hit about 300 balls after his round", he added, and at 7:00, Sullivan was still out playing, with the coach patiently waiting in the clubhouse.

Open letter to John O'Keefe

I was shocked to read in Wednesday's Collegian that you are helping to plan budget cuts. According to the Collegian, you echoed Dukakis' very words, saying that 10 per cent "fat" can be trimmed without affecting student services.

I want to know if this could possibly be true. Thousands of students at UMass have been mobilizing against budget cuts and tuition hikes during the past three weeks. Everyone knows that deep sentiment exists on this campus about these issues. I am completely aghast that you and 25 other "student leaders" will be helping to make that 10 per cent budget cut a reality. If that wasn't hard enough to take, John, I was completely floored to read that you are going beyond what even Dukakis himself has dared to demand: are you really calling for a "graduated tuition increase?"

The Collegian reported that "O'Keefe and a contingent of other UMass students will travel to Boston to present their recommended cuts to the Governor and Education Secretary Paul Parks." What's this about "recommended cuts," John? What about the thousands of students who voted against budget cuts and tuition increases in the referendum, who participated in the Town Meetings, the two day Moratorium, and in the State House demonstration? What about the thousands of students who gave Dukakis a cool, if not downright hostile reception this week?

The demands of the students at UMass are clear. Students are not calling for a 10 per cent cut in our budget. We want NO budget cuts and NO tuition increase and NO fee hikes. I don't know who your 25 "student leaders" are but I do know that the Student Action Committee |SAC|, the group that initiated the Town Meetings and Moratorium, was not consulted.

There is an old word to describe what is happening to you, John O'Keefe. You are being co-opted. You and the twenty-five "leaders" will be used by Dukakis to help cut 10 per cent out of the university budget. You may even had Dukakis a bonus of a tuition hike to boot.

Dukakis wants student input into budget cuts for a different reason. He wants to prove to the legislature that such a cut is politically feasible. He needs to show the legislature that cutbacks can be made without touching off even more massive protests when students return in the fall. He knows that if he can find some students to help plan the cuts such protests would be very difficult to mount because student leaders will share the guilt. Dukakis needs you now, John, but when he gets finished with cramming the 10 per cent cut down our throats he won't have any more use for "student input."

By joining Dukakis in calling for a budget cut, meeting with him to plan out who should get cut, and on top of that, calling for a tuition hike, you are doing much to destroy the student unit that took so long to develop and that is so essential to fighting against the budget cutters.

The solution to any administration "fat" is not to help Dukakis give that money back to the state. Student Government should work with students in gaining student input right here on campus so allocations will reflect student needs. Going to Dukakis is a substitute for ongoing organizing on campus.

The best guarantee of our rights is students united in massive actions like the ones we have been holding during the past three weeks. No group of twenty-five "student leaders" acting behind the backs of the students can adequately defend our rights. I propose that your proposed actions be put to a vote by the student body either in a Town Meeting or in a referendum so students can discuss, debate, and decide on this question, just as we have on every other question about what to do about these cutbacks. You have absolutely no right to act behind the backs of the students, without our consent, and in a way that contradicts every democratic decision that has been made so far.

You cannot be on both sides of this issue, John. The Governor wants to cut the budget. The majority of students are against the cutbacks.

You should go and speak to the governor, John, but you should not work with him to get our budget cut. You should tell him, "No budget cuts, No tuition increases, No fee hikes," just as more than 8000 students did when we voted to hold a Moratorium.

If you join the ranks of the budget cutters, John O'Keefe, you will be doing a great disservice to the students at UMass. I urge you to reconsider, or in any case to do nothing witnout a full discussion and vote by the students.

"He whose vision is so limited he can only see his own shit has his head up his ass."

Pagan Proverb

Already several readers may realize that this letter is a reply to Steve Tripoli's article of May 9.

Although we certainly appreciate the publicity, it is unfortunate that Mr. Tripoli chooses to regard the "Hard Core First" t-shirts in his own way. It seems this is his style, though, as the entire article was certainly somewhat bent to his line of sight. He implies that the proposal for the Awareness Center predated the proposal for a pool table, which is untrue. He chose to ignore the fact that an Awareness Center in Cashin folded up due to lack of interest, and that establishing another one would be at best a poor gamble. The concern of all was to get the most use out of a very limited space.

It also seems that his perception was not particularly keen that night, or he might have noticed that only one member of the Hard Core First actually voted, as only one of us had the vote. Had he done a little more homework he might have discovered that Hard Core First is not a major factor in dorm politics, but merely happened to be the faction which caught his eye.

Having rated an entire paragraph of wondrous words of wisdom in his article, I feel that a response from me is called for. I challenge you, Mr. Tripoli, to argue my statement in its proper context, should you learn the meaning of the word "minority," and take a course in elementary mathematics to learn how to add. My point was that an Awareness Center would have to be directed toward all who might feel the need for it, not necessarily to "minorities." I hardly meant to imply that I am poor and helpless, much less oppressed.

In the future, sir, kindly show the responsibility that should come with your position, and make some attempt, however, feeble, to research the facts.

The Seam Of Conscious

By KYRIAKOS KAROUTSOS

I have finally arrived at the conclusion that the more conscious one is, the more miserable one becomes. It took me a while to arrive at this conclusion, and the journey was not a non-stop affair. The evolution of my mind was such a processual affair that only recently have I become aware of the importance of consciousness and its far-reaching implications. Perhaps the journey which brought me to to such a conclusion lasted so long because consciousness is not something which can be attained as a total entity through the process of a single step, a single action, or a single thought. Consciousness resembles a ladder — each step we take we come closer to the peak, the peak being total consciousness.

Now, I do not know whether there is such a thing as a "total consciousness." I do not know whether there is an end to the road which leads towards total consciousness. But I do know that an individual can, and does, travel such a road. Along this road there are a great number of resting places. The travelers frequently utilize these stops to regain their strength. At each of these resting places there are a number of individuals who have become "permanent residents." These individuals have travelled the road of consciousness and they have arrived at a certain stop from which they are unwilling to leave. They are unwilling to leave because they are either tired of travelling, or because they think that they have finally arrived at their destination. Each of the stops along the road towards consciousness has its share of permanent residents. They are unwilling to travel toward the next stop, and disillusionment plays a large role in their decision.

But the further you travel, the more you become aware that the road leads towards resentment of the state this world is in, and you realize that you are travelling a lonely road. You may meet fellow travellers now and then, but they, like you, are wrapped within their own consciousness and perpetual resentment and loneliness. Yes, the road towards consciousness is lonely indeed. It is characterized by the resentment of a multitude of values around which we adjust our lives. This is when frustration and suffering come into play. We may resent values which are vile and degrading, but we are caught within the claws of a monster which is being fed by the people who have become permanent residents of one or another of the stops which we chose to leave behind us.

Questioning becomes a norm — an endless torment. Everything must be questioned, but when you question something you should be able to propose alternatives. So, you go on and propose your alternatives. The result? Ridicule and rejection of these alternatives by those who have abandoned the journey, the journey which we all began when we were born — the journey towards total consciousness. Your alternatives are rejected, and more frustration sets in. You know, you just know, that your alternatives will work, but somehow you become aware that you may never see them implemented. They will be rejected by the weaklings who have abandoned the quest — the journey. How frustrating it is to have an answer to a problem and to realize that you are shouting it among a petrified forest of trees resembling humans. How frustrating indeed.

The reward of consciousness is that of personal and unlimited satisfaction — that yes, you are conscious, more conscious than most, and even though you may suffer more because of it, you will gain the inner self-respect which others lack.

Course Attendance increases
Class consciousness

By JOHN MATTHEWS

Most economists agree: "Schoolwork is both a consumption and investment good." So their answer to the question: why go to school, is: the schooling you get has a double advantage. Not only do you invest in yourself in such a way that you can expect to get a high paying job in the future — you are also having fun! But can we take this picture of schoolwork seriously?

Let us consider the "consumption" side. Since by "consumption good" the economists mean something that is "enjoyable, pleasurable, and satisfying," anyone calling schooling a consumption good must be kidding.

The constant pressure to finish assignments, the hassle of schedules, and the rest of the self-disciplining that goes on, immediately quells any possible fun. Surely one might say there is some enjoyment going on in school. However, it isn't the education that is enjoyable, but rather the struggle against the education that is enjoyable. For example, it is the trips you take to get away from classes, the love affairs that are so distracting, the meandering conversations in bars, the demonstrations that shut it down: all that you do in order not to be educated.

What about the "investment" side? All throughout the sixties, economics professors, bankers, "guidance" counselors agreed: school was a good personal investment.

The idea was that you could invest in yourself by going to school in the same way a corporation buys machines in order to make a bigger profit operating on the principle: you have to spend money (invest) in order to make money. You might wonder whether you actually get more money from going to school in the long run. In

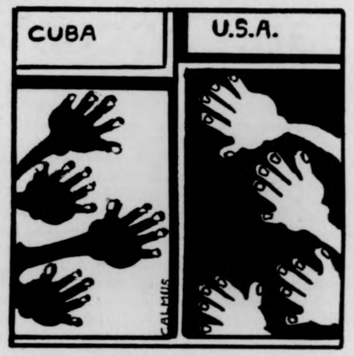
Doubleplay In The Caribbean

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

United States and Cuba seem to be in the stage of a detente policies toward a re-establishment of diplomatic relations. The visit of Senator McGovern seems to be productive since some agreements have been achieved.

As it happened with the detente relations with the People's Republic of China, it seems that sports will be the "diplomatic language." In the U.S.-Cuba case, basketball and baseball games. Baseball has a particularly wide popularity among the Cubans and other Caribbean nations.

Boston Red Sox, centralized in the figure of Luis Tryant, and his parents located in Cuba, could be one of the first steps taken toward the re-establishing of diplomatic relations. Tryant's parents could be allowed to visit their son in Boston. If that happens, one of the differences between the two nations' governments toward the way that each government allows their citizens to move to foreign countries will be resolved, at least in part.



It's evident that Boston has a considerable Cuban population and it will be very important to know, that at least the Massachusetts Cubans are ready to face the acceptance of U.S.-Cuba detente relations, without changing the political system of any of the countries involved.

Since the Bicentennial began in Massachusetts, it has placed in the state, and especially in Boston, a lot of responsibility. If some of the McGovern-Castro talks get into practice, both nations will begin a new era of foreign relations.

It was reported in past weeks that a group of Mexican Americans were planning to visit the Republic of Cuba. It is unknown if they were in negotiations as was McGovern. However, it is known that one of the visitors was a Texas County Judge named Jesus Gutierrez, who was also founder of the Raza Unida Party.

Guiterrez was quoted as going to Cuba to study how "the Cuban Communists exercise control".

In any case, it seems that many people in the country, Americans and ethnic groups, will feel better with the new Detente policies between the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba. As they call it in Havana, "Territorio Libre."

Cooperative Housing — An alternative?

By DEBBIE SCHAFER

> "A cooperative is a business organization providing a service or a product to its members; an organization which is owned and operated exclusively by those it serves. It operates on a non-profit basis, distributing surpluses in direct proportion to patronage...A cooperative is simply people doing what needs to be done and doing it together."
> University of Minnesota Commonwealth Terracen Cooperative Community Resident handbook p. 1

Students are angry. Angry about not enough student power, not enough student input concerning University policy, high fees for smaller services...in essence, we as students are lacking in control over our lives while at UMass. "Most would agree that students have little power over their lives, and that those wielding the power will not readily hand it over," states the Student Guide to Economic Survival.

Simply stated, students are oppressed. This oppression has led to anger, and in turn to a search for alternatives — alternatives that will give us some semblance of control over our lives, our education, and our dollars.

A key issue of concern in this respect is the housing situation, both on-campus and in the surrounding communities. One need only look around to see that students are faced with a housing crisis. The Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) has issued a report, In Pursuit of Shelter — The Housing Crisis at UMass, dealing specifically with the housing issue.

The conclusion of the SCER report is this: "It is the economic and political system which contributes to the high rents and poor conditions of both dorm and private apartment dwellers. It is these same 'interests' which lead to mandatory dorm living and shoddy overpriced apartments...Only through unified action will all groups, dorm residents, apartment dwellers and non-students be able to grasp more control over their own lives and living conditions." The report suggests that the University and the students begin to look at new alternatives to the housing situation" which will in turn "usher in a new era of students providing more control, and ownership, of their own housing."

Commentary

What are some alternatives to the present housing situation? One answer that comes to mind is the organization of student housing into a student-run cooperative. Cooperatives have been successfully established and maintained on several college campuses, including U. of Michigan in Ann Arbor, U. of Minnesota, and U. of California at Los Angeles and Berkeley.

If we accept the definition of a cooperative as "an organization which is owned and operated exclusively by those it serves", and apply the definition to a housing system for students, we have this — housing which is run for the benefit of, by, and for students. "Obviously, an enterprise operated by students for the benefit of students has the potential of offering better quality merchandise at lower prices," states The Whole University Catalogue, published earlier this year by the Student Organizing Project.

Examples of student controlled cooperatives on campus are The People's Market, a stereo co-op, and the newly established student credit union. Each of these represents a positive step in the direction of student control over their lives as consumers. Could it be that student-run housing on campus will be the next outgrowth of this trend?

It's more than just a vaguely discussed possibility. Much more. Residents of on-campus Married Student Housing (MSH) apartments are presently negotiating with University officials to sign a cooperative management agreement by May 25. A feasibility study is now underway, and if negotiations are successful the tenants of MSH (this includes Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments) will be self-managing as of next semester.

The tenants feel that a cooperative arrangement could reduce operating costs for the apartments, and save money for both the tenants and the University. According to a proposal submitted to the UMass Trustees by the UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) in February, "The resident, through co-operative self management, will be able to obtain lower rents and to create a sense of community. The University is freed from

Dorm improvements for 75-76

Dean: 'Focus will be on basic necessities'

By SUE ADLEY

What types of dorm improvements are in the plans of the Office of Residential Life (ORL) starting next fall to make dorm living more palatable to students? Ken Dean, acting director of the ORL said that "the focus next year will be on basic necessities."

"The proposed rent increase for '75-'76 is $25-$30, depending on the dorm," Dean said. He spoke of increased operating costs for the dormitories, and said that utilities alone have gone up tremendously. "This hike in utility costs by itself would use up the total rent increase," he said. "With such a small rent increase, only a comparable number of improvements can be made. We're being careful with furniture purchases, for example, so money can be put to areas of greatest need."

Robert Campbell, Operations Manager for the ORL, said that they would take care of the most needed improvements with the money available. "Things such as roof work (leaks), outside painting and gutter repairs are top priority now. We'll handle those first," he said.

"The Northeast, Central and Southwest areas have the most dorms with these problems. These things have been put aside up until now because of the concentration on inside improvements paid for with area environmental funds."

Dean said the dorms would "most probably" be at more than full capacity in the fall, with "between two and four hundred more students expected" to move in to the residential areas. "We'll be recognizing medical singles," he said, "but no student in this category will have a single room in a room designated as a double." He said the administration was "hopeful" about making a decision on voluntary dorm living by January of 1976.

"We're making plans for this now by using a budgeting strategy," Dean said. "A low rent increase means a low maintenance level. Better utilization of space in the dorms is a legitimate criticism, but we're low on funds." Campbell said there was a dilemma with the utilization of money. "Improvements that are basic needs such as ventilation systems are things that are not highly visible. Consequently, people don't see it, so they don't think anything is being done," he said.

Both men said that one dorm per year undergoes renovation. Butterfield in Central will be one for the next school year. Renovation activities, according to Dean, include "taking care of life-support systems....over-hauling them (electricity, plumbing, ventilation). It's a reconfiguration of space, reutilization of space, depending on what the students want," he said. "We help the residents decide what they want from their dorm's renovation through extensive pre-planning: house meetings, surveys, with all the students and the head of residence included in this."

Dean said that renovation procedures begin when the students in the particular dorm move elsewhere on campus in January of the spring semester. "The renovation procedure will be somewhat different for Butterfield," he said. "The residents have asked us to do very little interior work on the building — to leave most of it just as it is. We will, however, fix lights, wiring, etc. so those things will be in good working condition for another ten to fifteen years."

The use of hotplates in the dorms was brought up, and Dean said he realized the lack of kitchen facilities in most dorms. Therefore, he could understand the reason for extensive use of hotplates, but that they were still a "safety hazard." "Up till now," he said, "there has been no weekend meal service. Next semester it will be available — a seven day meal plan — so the hotplate danger may be lessened a great deal. Not only cooking appliances, but other types often cause power blow-outs. We've found that the cost of re-wiring one whole dorm is approximately $60,000."

Dean, as director of the ORL, has not applied permanently for the job.

"It's basically due to my previous ten years of experience," he said, "in management consulting, systems engineering. I didn't feel that I was bringing the correct innovations to the job. I took the position as acting for one year to set up an organizational structure."

A selection committee, according to Dean, has been in the process of selecting a new director of the ORL for a number of months. There are now four finalists for the position from various parts of the country. "The committee will be meeting today to decide on a final candidate," he said. "The people who make up the selection committee are staff from the ORL, the Physical Plant, Budgeting office, Student Development Center, Food Services, and an Assistant Area Director. The students are from area governments, the SGA, Graduate Senate, Food Services, Residential Life Board, and possibly Commuter Affairs. In all, there are eight staff and eight students. The chairperson is Sara Hamilton from the Student Development Center."

Dean said that "tremendous progress was made this year, and a lot was learned. "We have big tasks ahead of us next. I just hope it's an easier year."

Lea$e Law$

By MICHAEL COSTA
Progressive News Service

This article is the first of a three part series presented to inform people of the problems involved in moving out of apartments or houses in the Pioneer Valley. If you are one of the many thousands who signed a lease in September and plan to leave the Valley for the summer, this information could save you some money.

A lease is a written agreement between a landlord and a tenant indicating the date on which the tenancy is to end. If it is a "self-extending lease it will say so on the front and contain a clause something like: " ... and continuing in full force and effect after the above term from year to year until either the Lessor or Lessee on or before [date] gives to the other written notice to terminate this lease." This clause serves to extend your lease for another year, unless you give written notice by the date specified in the clause.

Most leases in the Amherst area do not contain this clause and your tenancy simply ends on the day the lease specifies. The only other thing to be done is to arrange to get your deposit back.

SUBLETTING

Most leases in the immediate Amherst area run twelve months and expire August 31. If you want to leave your tenancy, you should explore assigning or subletting for the duration of your lease. Technically, a sublet is a written agreement between you and another person whereby that other person agrees to occupy your apartment, be bound by the terms of your lease, and give the apartment back to you before the lease expires. Under such arrangements, you remain liable to your landlord for performance of all terms of your lease. If you "assign" your lease rather than sublet, that is if you give up your apartment for the remainder of the lease term, both you and your "assignees" (or sub-tenant) remain liable for fulfilling the terms of the lease. Those who notify their landlord of their intention to sublet sometimes fare better. With his or her permission, the substantial effect is the substitution of one tenant for another; so when you leave the new tenant takes responsibility to the landlord.

A glance at the Collegian will reveal the oversupply of apartments to sublet. By all means try. If you fail, (or don't want to hassle with it), you still have some options. It is legal to move out if your landlord agrees to let you go. To do this, give your landlord written notice that you are "surrendering" your lease, and try to get written acceptance of your surrender from him. If he does not let you go, you can leave anyway. You risk being held responsible for the rent until someone else moves in if your landlord decides to sue. It is highly unlikely that he will return your security deposit, so you might take the initiative and withhold rent for the last month you stay. Don't assume the landlord will sue simply because he has the right to.

Campus Colloquy

'Tenure' — a magic word

By HILLARY MARTICK

This is the first part in a series of articles which will discuss the tenure system at UMass. Topics to be discussed include: reactions to the present system, suggestions for changes, feelings about student input into tenure decisions, opinions about the imminent adoption of a set of university-wide personnel policy guidelines, and comments about how the current state and national economic downturn might affect the granting of tenure in the future.

Although generally acclaimed as a necessary part of a university teaching career, the tenure system at UMass is currently undergoing some changes. Both the faculty and administration are extremely concerned with the influence on the tenure system of such factors as: increased weight being placed on the long-range needs of the University as a criteria for recommending tenure, the imminent adoption of a set of university-wide personnel policies, and the implications of the present state and national economic problems.

To professors, tenure is that all-important term which has the potential for determining their future. As John M. Maki, professor of political science, puts it "The granting of tenure is a matter of very great importance, especially to the individual, because it is an assurance of job security. It means the University commits itself to paying the salary of that individual for life."

Administrators, from the department chairmen to the provost to the president, find themselves in the precarious position of having to recommend who should or should not be awarded tenure. They are responsible for making their decisions on the basis of how well faculty members meet the traditional standards of academic excellence as well as fit into the long range plans of their department and school or college. And beginning with next year's tenure decisions, the effect of budgetary constraints will have to be considered.

High Standards

Robert L. Gluckstern, former provost and now special executive assistant to the chancellor for academic affairs, feels the most important factor regarding tenure is that the standards for the awarding of tenure should be "extremely high." Although he encourages faculty to develop breadth in all three areas (teaching, research, and service), Gluckstern said he finds teaching to be the most essential skill.

Understandably, faculty members, having the most to lose, feel tenure decisions should be kept as close to the departmental and campus level as possible. They feel that the further administrators (such as the president and trustees) are from the campus, the harder it becomes for them to make fair and informed tenure decisions.

Stevenson W. Fletcher, this year's faculty delegate to the Board of Trustees (BOT), expresses similar concern on behalf of some members of the Board. "Members of the Faculty and Educational Policy committee (FEP) of the BOT don't feel they're in a position to evaluate the professional quality of an individual as well as the campuses can," he said.

"Institutional Need"

This year, faculty members have seen the introduction of the concept of "institutional need" and flexibility into the presently unwritten tenure criteria. Many faculty members have objected to the predominant use of the term "institutional need" as a criteria for tenure evaluation. They feel it was a phrase that was conveniently constructed and "thrown out" into the UMass political arena to be used as a justification for possible tenure denials.

But opposition to the term was strong enough to almost completely erase its semantic inclusion in the newest version of the Academic Personnel Policy (APP) document. This document, if adopted, will lay down, for the first time, a written set of university-wide personnel policy guidelines. The struggle over the term "institutional need" is an indication of faculty awareness of the portending significance of the APP document.

Tenure decisions are usually made in the sixth year of a faculty member's University career. They tend to follow a prescribed pattern which includes what should be contained in a dossier as well as the route that dossier follows as it makes its way through the various levels of decision-making.

In ascending order of authority, tenure recommendations normally travel from the departmental personnel committee to the department head or chairman. The recommendations from both the committee and heador chairman then go to the school or college personnel committee which sends its recommendations, along with the dean's, to the provost. Their reception by the provost and chancellor mark the final stage of decision-making at the campus level. Positive recommendations from the chancellor are then sent to the president, the Faculty and Educational Policy committee of the BOT, the BOT executive committee, and finally to the full Board for its approval. If a faculty member is denied tenure, he has a one-year period of grace before he must leave the University.

Grievances bold

Depending upon the nature and outcome of the tenure decision, all tenure candidates have access to a grievance and appeals procedure. A candidate is expected to begin discussing a grievance with administrators (such as the department chairman or dean) at the level where the first adverse recommendation was made. If attempts to resolve their grievances are still unsuccessful, faculty members may then turn to the grievance committee in their school or college or they may decide to appeal to the Faculty Senate Grievance committee for help.

While most faculty members are cognizant of the necessity of having a tenure system, some extol it while others prefer to identify problems in the system. Some factors which may influence faculty members' feelings about the tenure system might be: whether or not they have tenure, the department and school or college they are in, the position they hold, and whether they plan to remain at UMass.

Kenneth G. Picha, dean of the School of Engineering, relates the need for the tenure system to the fact that members of that school may become involved in very controversial issues, such as the question of whether to have

Two denials under review

By BILL DENSMORE

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery is reviewing the cases of two economics department faculty who were not approved for tenure by trustees last week, and may have a decision on whether to recommend them again within a few days.

Former Vice-Chancellor for academic affairs Robert L. Gluckstern, who acted on most of the 46 professors who were approved by trustees, said it was he decision not to recommend the two. But he said Bromery is reviewing his decisions now.

Gluckstern is now special assistant to Bromery.

The two are Assistant Professors Che S. Tsao and Arthur W. Wright. They were both recommended for tenure by the departmental personnel committee, Dean Dean Alfange, Jr., and Alfange's advisory council. But Gluckstern and Associate Provost Vere C. Chappell decided not to recommend tenure.

The only economics department member who received tenure this year was Michael H. Best. Best said last Thursday he believed it was student support which gained him approval on a trustee vote.

Wright, contacted at his office Friday, first talked of his tenure denial and then asked not to be quoted. He held out the hope that the decision may be reversed by Bromery and he will be recommended after all to the trustees.

"They have to make a decision this year on us, and so far we know they have not made a final decision," Wright said, adding, "they may still put us up."

Tsao could not be reached for comment Friday or Saturday.

Gluckstern, in a weekend telephone interview, was also reluctant to talk of the cases. But he did say the tenure disapproval was made "basically on the basis of performance" and the less on the issue of institutional need.

"It wasn't a question that the department didn't need people in these areas." He said Wright has done research in energy economics and Tsao has worked closely with the School of Business Administration.

But Gluckstern said Bromery can overrule the decisions and may do so within a few days. He said there is "too much polarization" in the economics department — "more than I would like to see."

The approval of tenure for Best and the denial for Wright and Tsao has apparently sparked conflict in that department and concern that tenure decisions are arbitrary or political in nature.

On Friday, tenured economics professor Vaclav Holesovsky wrote in a letter to the Collegian that:

"Professor Best got his tenure mainly (as he himself admits) thanks to organized student support, (and) two of his colleagues, vastly superior in all respects — professional competence, teaching as well as service — were denied tenure."

Holesovsky charged in his letter that the Marxist-oriented "radical" economists in the department have become a "dominant force which uses its power to eliminate people who are not of their political persuasion . . . . "

According to Holesovsky's letter, "the student public is being seriously misled and misinformed by a consistent presentation of Professor Best as a primadonna victim of satanic forces of reaction."

But according to Gluckstern, the decisions were not political "although the department doesn't think so." He said the decision to recommend Best was "unrelated to any form of student pressure."

Proposed marijuana legislation

Just a hundred dollar fine

By DEBORAH GALLAGHER

Senator Edward W. Brooke's proposed legislation which would make possession of one ounce or less of marijuana punishable by a $100 civil fine has received mixed, although generally favorable, reactions from members of the UMass community.

The reasons cited by Brooke for initiating the bill were the impotence of existing penalties in deterring marijuana use, the "unreasonably harsh" nature of the penalties which "jeopardize the futures of those young people who are arrested," the non-addictive qualities of marijuana, the overload of possession cases in the courst hampering law enforcement offices "while the perpetrators of far more serious drug offenses are out in the streets preying on our young," and the belief that the new law will not lead to greater use of marijuana.

"My position is hardly a radical one," the Republican Brooke said, "I simply wish to institute reasonable penalties for personal use of marijuana while assuring that the distributers of this drug are punished with the full weight of the law."

"It's not going to change anything for me." said a "semi-wholesaler" (Ed. note: name withheld) of marijuana and hashish in the Amherst area, "I'll be selling the same way." The "dealer" whose business is "select — I deal with my friends," said the proposed legislation "won't make much of a difference in buying but will affect a difference in using it." Prices, he said, may or may not come down. "It depends on whether or not the law enforcement changes," he added.

Betsy Gradone, a Music major and "non-user" from Newton, said the laws are "to harsh" as they now stand. "I'm not thrilled about it (the legislation), I'm not thrilled about drug use."

"I would not actively support it," she said, "but I believe it is fair and would not oppose it."

A counselor in Van Meter South dormitory who smokes "occasionally," said, "I think what he (Brooke) is saying is right — $5,000 for less than an ounce is quite a penalty."

When asked if she would favor complete legalization for possession of marijuana, she said, "no, not really. Even though I'm not against people who use it, more would use it and probably use it more." Her greatest concern she said, would be increased use of alcohol and marijuana combined. "I want to see booze made illegal," she said. "If the combined use increases, there would probably be more accidents."

Superintendent of Amherst schools Donald B. Frizzle said that despite the liberalization of the law, "it's still an offense." At this age level, he said, "it won't have agreat effect." The schools try to counsel those who use marijuana on a "personal, family level," he said, adding, "we don't use the court routes."

"I'd support it," James Aldrich said, "if it would relieve the police and the courts." Aldrich is an electrician's apprentice and UMass alumnus from Amherst.

A spokesperson for the UMass police refused to comment when asked if the legislation would increase the use of marijuana on campus. A spokesperson for the University Health Services also declined to comment.

SOP — student unionization

Gaining momentum

By GARY McWILLIAM

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) announced the campus-wide canvass for endorsement of student unionization is two-thirds of the way through its projected goal of 10,000 signatures.

Nesta King of the SOP said door-to-door canvassors wil "try to reach every student on campus" by the end of the week.

'We get many questions from students like how do we know this union won't take on the bad aspects of a union...'

SOP members will attempt a last ditch effort to garner student support and participation in unionization activities in dormitory meetings tomorrow and Wednesday nights.

The SOP will be active this summer and is planning weekend workshops on organizing and unionization, according to King. "We're basically a resource project," said King, "the summer workshops would prepare organizers and ready plans to continue unionization next September."

King said because of the success of the canvassing the SOP is "moving into a different stage of the organizing effort."

"We get many questions from students like how do we know this union won't take on the bad aspects of a union," said King, "this just wouldn't happen."

King said she doesn't feel the size of the university impairs effective unionization.

"We are flexible enough for the diversification," said King.

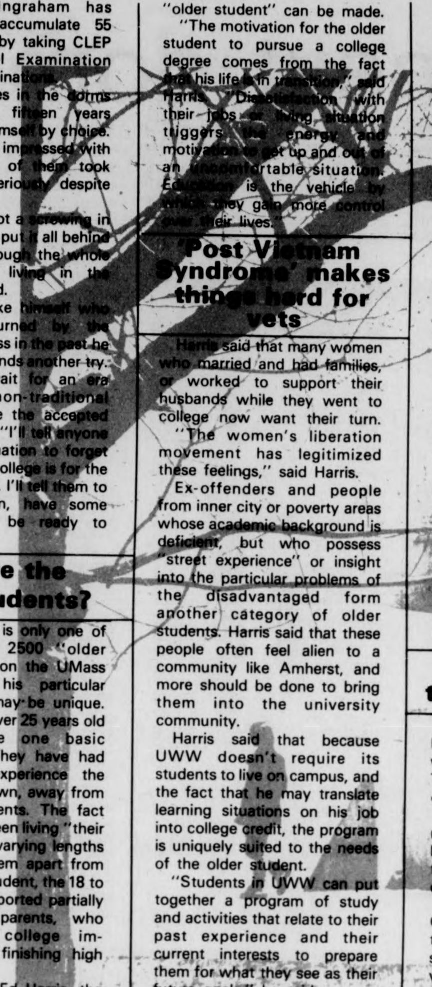
The dilemma of the older student

By WALTER HAMILTON



The residents of Kennedy Dorm call Bill Ingraham the "Geritol Kid." Ingraham, a 34 year old ex-bus driver doesn't object to the tag and says that he thoroughly enjoys being a UMass freshman.

With only those painful memories of Danvers High School, "the minimum security prison" in Ingraham's words, lingering in his distant academic past, he decided to take the SAT's and give college a try.

"In high school I was between a rock and a hard place," he said. "I try not to be bitter about how they all gave up on me there because bitterness is non-productive." Ingraham quit high school to join the Army, then moved on to several factory jobs before becoming a charter bus driver.

"I'm here to redeem myself after a shitty start," he said.

He scored a 750 on the verbal SAT, was accepted by UMass, quit the bus, packed up his things into his old VW, and with much fear and trembling headed for Amherst last January where he says he is now comfortable.

An extremely well read ex-bus driver, Ingraham has managed to accumulate 55 college credits by taking CLEP (College Level Examination Program) examinations.

Ingraham lives in the dorms with students fifteen years younger than himself by choice. He said he was impressed with the way many of them took their studies seriously despite their age.

"I felt like I got a screwing in life. I wanted to put it all behind me and go through the whole drill, including living in the dorms," he said.

For people like himself who have been burned by the academic process in the past he highly recommends another try.

"I had to wait for an era when the non-traditional student became the accepted thing," he said. "I'll tell anyone in the same situation to forget the notion that college is for the 18 to 22 year old. I'll tell them to come on down, have some chutzpah, and be ready to study."

Who are the older students?

Bill Ingraham is only one of the estimated 2500 "older students" now on the UMass campus, and his particular circumstances may be unique. Most students over 25 years old however share one basic characteristic. They have had the time to experience the world on their own, away from school and parents. The fact that they have been living "their own lives," for varying lengths of time, sets them apart from the traditional student, the 18 to 22 year old, supported partially or totally by parents, who moved onto college immediately after finishing high school.

According to Ed Harris, the director of the University Without Walls (UWW), some generalizations to profile the "older student" can be made.

"The motivation for the older student to pursue a college degree comes from the fact that his life is in transition," said Harris. "Dissatisfaction with their jobs or living situation triggers the energy and motivation to get up and out of an uncomfortable situation. Education is the vehicle by which they gain more control over their lives."

'Post Vietnam Syndrome' makes things hard for vets

Harris said that many women who married and had families, or worked to support their husbands while they went to college now want their turn.

"The women's liberation movement has legitimized these feelings," said Harris.

Ex-offenders and people from inner city or poverty areas whose academic background is deficient, but who possess "street experience" or insight into the particular problems of the disadvantaged form another category of older students. Harris said that these people often feel alien to a community like Amherst, and more should be done to bring them into the university community.

Harris said that because UWW doesn't require its students to live on campus, and the fact that he may translate learning situations on his job into college credit, the program is uniquely suited to the needs of the older student.

"Students in UWW can put together a program of study and activities that relate to their past experience and their current interests to prepare them for what they see as their future goals," he said.

Many students find order through CAOS

The people at CAOS (Counseling Assistance for Older Students) want to bring order to the chaos many older students must confront especially when they first arrive at UMass. A new organization on campus, it plans to develop a unified program to serve the academic, psychological, and social needs of the older students here.

Next fall, CAOS will offer workshops for the older student which will make the transition to student life easier and more rewarding. The workshops will teach efficient study techniques; such as how to break down a syllabus into its central and peripheral components, so that the student can decide how much of the reading assignments are vital to the course.

The students will also be informed that they can demand alternatives to multiple choice testing, and traditional grading.

"We have to show them that it's OK to demand special consideration from their professors," said Kearney. "Many students are afraid to go up to a professor, and if they're rebuffed once, they're afraid to go back. We have to encourage them to fight for what they need."

Kearney said that psychological and academic counseling will be offered by trained undergraduate volunteers who will also be older students. She said that many older students were under great pressure to succeed and consquently anxiety is a big problem.

Money is often the biggest hassle

"We have to show that a high anxiety level interferes with a person's ability to learn. They should be motivated for other reasons," she said.

By reason of his years of military service the veteran is likely to be several years older than most of the students in his classes.

The Veteran's Coalition for Community Affairs, located in the Student Union is staffed by student volunteers, themselves veterans, who address primarily the political, rather than the social or financial needs of the veteran student.

Recently the Coalition sponsored an appearance on campus by Robert Jay Lifton, a psychologist dedicated to the problems of the Vietnam veteran. Lifton conducted workshops and spoke on the "Post Vietnam Syndrome", a combination of guilt, anxiety, and fear experienced by many Vietnam veterans. As suggested by Lifton, the coalition now holds "rap groups" where veterans are encouraged to talk about their Vietnam experience, and hopefully exchange some of their negative feelings for constructive plans to change themselves and their society.

A member of the Coalition, Joe Cotter, said that his organization served the Vietnam Veteran in some of the same ways that the American Legion served veterans of previous wars.

"Those guys are still into uniforms and hats and the military life though," said Cotter, "and that's the bullshit most of us here are trying to forget."

How does the older student fare with Financial Aid?

"We rank people according to their need," said Richard Dent, director of the Office of Student Financial Aid at UMass, "and the older students because they're usually filing for aid as financially independent students, tend to be needier."

Dent said that some grants, such as the B.E.O.G. (Basic Educational Opportunity Grants) and the Mass. Board of Higher Education Grants are usually denied older students because they can't be given to anyone who attended college before April 1, 1973.

"Most of the over 25 students we handle have attended some kind of school before that date," he said.

According to Dent, married students with children because of their heavy financial need often cannot be supplied with enough grants, loans and jobs by his office to pay their way.

"A married couple with children who are both attending school will need about $8400 a year," Dent said. "There is hardly any way our office can find enough money, and we invariably fall short by a couple thousand dollars."

A student who already has one bachelor's degree and is interested in getting another through the Second Bachelor's Degree program offered by the university is caught in a unique financial squeeze. Classified as a graduate student, he is neither eligible for scholarships intended for undergrads, nor any of the research assistantships or teaching positions available to Master's degree candidates.

"The Second Bachelor's degree candidate must rely on National Defense Student Loans and Work Study Jobs because there are no scholarship funds available to him," said Dent.

Dent added that the older student had an advantage when being placed in a Work Study Job.

Laos: The next domino?

Compiled from wire reels

VIENTIANE — The Communist Pathet Lao yesterday moved to consolidate power over Laos' coalition government and Premier Souvanna Phouma spoke of "enexpected changes" at Constitution Day observances. Ousted rightest leaders were fleeing the country or in hiding.

King Savang Vatthana presided over the ceremonies at which neutralist Prince Souvanna mentioned the changes in a brief speech before the award of decorations to military and civilian officials.

One change was the appointment of a Pathet Lao minister as acting defense minister, succeeding a resigned rightist cabinet member.

Four key rightist cabinet ministers whose resignations were announced Saturday and 22 of the about 25 loyalist army generals did not attend.

Souvanna, in a white uniform with a red and gold sash, also told assembled diplomats and a small crowd of about 1,000 city residents that "all around the kingdom important changes have occured."

The rumors came after Premier Souvanna virtually conceded yesterday that the Pathet Lao have won the struggle for control of Laos. He said it is necessary to look at the facts and prepare to reach "an accord with history."

If the Pathet Lao win control of Laos, the country will be the third of the U.S.-backed countries of Indochina to come under Communist control in recent weeks. Cambodia surrendered April 17 and South Vietnam on April 30.

Souvanna Phouma's speech followed the resignation of four senior rightist cabinet ministers and the removal of three top rightist generals from their posts. This amounts to the collapse of the pro-American wing of the coalition government and leaves the Pathet Lao as the only cohesive political organization in the country.

The announcement by the 73-year-old Souvanna amounts to his concession to his 63-year-old half-brother, Prince Souphanouvong, who heads the Pathet Lao. The Paris-educated sons of a Lao prince have differed for much of their lives over the path that Laos should take.

Both favored its independence from France after World War II, but Souvanna chose to work within the existing government for gradual change while Souphanouvong went to Hanoi to join Ho Chi Minh's Viet Minh. He later founded the Pathet Lao.

After the ceremonies, Souvanna met with the Pathet Lao Deputy Premier, Phnoumi Vongvichit.

Unified Vietnam may be in the future

By United Press International

The new Communist rulers of South Vietnam intend to hold nationwide elections and eventually reunify North and South Vietnam, a delayed dispatch from Saigon said yesterday.

A Radio Saigon broadcast monitored in Bangkok, meanwhile, said South Vietnam has sent diplomatic notes to the five countries that comprise the Assocation of Southeast Asian Nations, asking them to advise all Vietnamese refugees that the new Saigon regime will provide transportation for their return home.

UPI Saigon bureau manager Alan Dawson reported that Lt. Gen. Tran Van Tra told a news conference May 8 at the former presidential palace in Saigon that he was unsure when the elections would be held or when the Provisional Revolutionary Government would take office.

Southeast Asian defense pact

KUALA LUMPUR [UPI] — Senior officials from five non-Communist nations met yesterday in this capital city of Malaysia to draft a blueprint for a neutral Southeast Asian peace zone, free of defense pacts with big powers and including Communist Indochina.

Conference sources said the Association of Southeast Asian Nations hoped to have a final blueprint ready for adoption by the foreign ministers who begin a three-day conference Tuesday.

The non-Communist nations comprising ASEAN include Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Thailand and Singapore. Four years ago, they declared their determination to create a neutral zone hopefully including both Vietnams, Cambodia, Laos, Burma and the ASEAN members.

The sources said provisions of the blueprint would require zone members to be free of foreign military bases and prohibit zone nations from having defense pacts with outside powers.

Ky and kibbutz

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. [UPI] — Former South Vietnamese Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky said yesterday he wants to establish an Israeli-style farming kibbutz, perhaps in Arkansas or Texas, for thousands of Vietnamese refugees.

Those who fled Vietnam, Ky said, would be happier as farmers than as city dwellers.

Ky, who is now living with other refugees in a tent city at this California military base, said he has received hundreds of offers of farmland in recent days.

Ky was interviewed on ABC's "Issues and Answers."

Planes from Thailand

AGANA, Guam [UPI] — The U.S. aircraft carrier Midway steamed into Guam yesterday carrying 52 Vietnamese Air Force planes that touched off a diplomatic battle among the United States, Thailand and the new Communist government of South Vietnam.

South Vietnam pilots fleeing the Communist advance on Saigon flew the planes to Thailand in the last days of the Vietnam war.

Boston busing: Some say too much, others say too little BOSTON [AP] — The final public school desegregation order for Boston issued by a federal judge over the weekend prompted mixed reaction, with some arguing the plan does not go far enough and others saying there will be too much forced busing.

Unveiled at a news conference Saturday, the so-called Phase II, or citywide, desegregation plan drawn up by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. would require the busing of approximately 21,000 students, 12,000 in lower grades.

Under Phase I which went into effect last fall, about 17,000 students, mostly high school and junior high, were assigned to be bused.

The busing issue has sparked sporadic incidents of racial violence, particularly in the predominantly white South Boston section of the city.

Through an aide, Mayor Kevin H. White said yesterday that he was disappointed in Garrity's decision because it would disrupt neighborhoods.

"By his order, Judge Garrity has virtually guaranteed a continuation of the present level of tension and hostility throughout the city," White said.

John J. McDonough, chairman of the Boston School Committee, who with his committee colleagues had proposed a no-busing plan, said Garrity's plan " ... is a disaster for the people of the city of Boston," and said the plan will be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Boston chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said it would have no comment on the plan until today.

John Doherty, president of the Boston Teachers' Union, said a section of the plan which would close 20 schools would create a burden on teachers.

"The timetable is unrealistic," Doherty said. "It will work against any kind of smooth opening in September."

Louise Day Hicks, city councilor and long-time busing foe, termed the plan "outrageous," and school committee member John J. Kerrigan said, "It's rather a sorry Mother's Day present for the people of Boston."

Mrs. Virginia Sheehy of South Boston, a member of the executive board of the Restore Our Alienated Rights (ROAR) group, an organization opposed to busing, predicted the plan would bring "all that much more opposition" from parents.

Mrs. Sheehy and Mrs. Rita Graul, also of ROAR, have been ordered to appear in U.S. District Court today as a preliminary to questioning on disturbances at South Boston High School last week. The order was issued by Garrity.

Besides traditional schools in eight districts, the judge ordered the establishment of 22 "magnet" schools, intended to attract pupils from throughout the city and reflect Boston's racial composition.

Under the plan, the schools would have 72,000 students, about 50 per cent white, 35 per cent black and the rest other minorities.

Under the new plan, schools in all but one of the city's neighborhoods will have a significant proportion of black students. The one area excluded is East Boston, which is separated from the rest of the city by Boston Harbor. Schools there will remain predominantly white.

South Boston will continue to share its schools with neighboring black areas.

First no taxes, then temporary taxes, now permanent taxes

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' deficit tax package proposes permanent tax increases, even though the governor has said he wants the increased levies only temporarily.

There is no provision in the tax legislation filed thus far by Dukakis for a roll back of the proposed increases, according to an administration aide. Any roll back would require a repealer later on.

The governor is seeking a permanent, $132 million tax boost on cigarettes up five cents a pack and gasoline up four cents a gallon. For the first four to five years, the proceeds would pay for the $498 million deficit Dukakis said the state has already incurred. After that, this tax money would go to other state purposes.

A second tax package being discussed — reportedly in the neighborhood of $200 million — would be required for the commonwealth's operations in the fiscal year starting July 1.

If two such tax packages were approved, it would be the biggest tax year the state has had, easily topping the $264 million approved in 1971.

Sen. Frederic W. Schlosstein Jr., D-Warren, chairman of the Taxation Committee, is cool to the immediate Dukakis plan because he opposes a deficit bond issue. He said if the state bails itself out of the red by borrowing the funds (bonds), it will quickly become a habit.

Schlosstein has been discussing a "state tax" concept that would defer some payments to cities and towns to avoid borrowings while earmarking the increase in the cigarette and gas excises to the communities. There has not been a state tax on municipalities for 30 years.

Schlosstein said he would like to save taxpayers the $85 million in potential bond interest charges.

The pressing problem for Dukakis is the state's cash situation. One of his advisers reported that there could be payless paydays next month if the legislature does not do something fast.

The governor anticipates strong resistance to his still delayed budget recommendations for next year that, sources predict, could call for massive layoffs as well as added taxes.

Dukakis has lost the support of Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti in two critical fiscal issues. Bellotti told the governor he is adamantly opposed to a budget cut and will appeal any reduction to the legislature.

The attorney general has also ruled that the governor cannot arbitrarily impound appropriated funds, a device chief executives often employed to control spending in disputed areas.

United Farm Workers agreement

SACRAMENTO, Calif. [UPI] — California's youthful governor, Edmund G. Brown Jr., has struck an historic accord between growers and farmworkers' leader Cesar Chavez which may end a decade of agricultural strife, field violence and nationwide food boycotts.

Brown, who has marched in the fields with Chavez, first unveiled his farm labor proposals a month ago. Chavez, the leader of the United Farm Workers Union, denounced then it as "not betrayal, but close." No one else like it much either.

Chavez' major concession was the bill's sharp restriction on secondary boycotts, which he used successfully to pressure growers into signing contracts after nationwide grape and lettuce boycotts.

Warship detente

BOSTON [UPI] — Anatoly F. Dobrynin, Soviet ambassador to the United States, will be on hand today for the first visit to the United States by Russian warships since World War II, the commander of the U.S. Second Fleet said yesterday.

At about the same time, two American guided missile destroyers, the USS Leahy and the USS Tattnall, are to sail into Leningrad, on the Russian Baltic coast.

President Bayh??

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., said yesterday he was considering another try for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1976, although he would drop the idea if he believed Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was going to run.

Bayh, who left the 1972 race when his wife underwent cancer surgery, said "a number of people" were asking him to consider a new effort.

Taking off

The cost of air fare to Argentina was not quoted in Friday's article about the summer CADIE program. If enough students apply to the program, there will be a charter flight. The cost will be $614 if ten students go and it will be decreased in proportion to the number of additional people who sign up.

Coming down

Tomorrow, the collegiate flying club will bring its Cessna aerobat to UMass. The plane will land at alumni stadium at 6:15 a.m. and will then taxi up Massachusetts Ave. with a police escort to the Haigis Mall where it will be on display all day. The purpose is to promote the flying club and aviation in general.

There will be a raffle at the site of the plane. The prizes are free flying lessons and glider rides. The plane will depart at about 6:00 p.m. and will take off from alumni field. Rate date is Wednesday.

At the Frederick Douglass Museum of African Art in Washington D.C., Alice Horner, a UMass student, straightens a portrait in the gallery. Horner is living and working in Washington this semester through the UMass Outreach Program. Outreach students work as unpaid interns in service and government jobs and receive university credit toward their major. There are nearly 200 such interns studying and working off-campus this semester in Massachusetts, New York City and Washington.

Still looking

The Summer Collegian is still looking for people who are interested in news reporting, photography, writing, editorials, fine arts and learning layout and graphics.

If you're staying near UMass this summer and would like to help out, come to the recruitment meeting tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Collegian office, Student Union, or contact Debbie Schafer or Dan LaBonte c-o the Collegian 545-3500.

Tonight is a night of great entertainment right at our own Fine Arts Center. Tap dancers, square dancers, and folk dancers will participate in the second tying-up of the Fine Arts building. Starting at 7:00 p.m., this 5-College Dance Concert will take place on the exterior of the Fine Arts building.

B.S. majors

The new Environmental Sciences major (B.S.) has been ratified by the board of trustees. Interested students are urged to contact Professor Linda G. Lockwood, at 5-2822. Students planning to enter the program in the fall semester should be interviewed by the end of this semester.

Film tonight...

There will be a free showing of the documentary film A Wall in Jerusalem tonight at 7 in Machmer W11. The full-length film, narrated by Richard Burton, presents a stirring documentary history of the story of Israel, focusing on Israel's European antecedents, the building of the land in the early days of the twentieth century, and the development of the State of Israel from its founding until 1967.

...a speaker too

Tonight at 8 in the UMass Campus Center, Lady Borden will speak on her two year experience living in the liberated areas of Vietnam while working on education. Borden most recently returned having been in the Quang Tri province of Vietnam as a staff member for the American Friends Service Committee. Her talk is being sponsored by SVS, AFSC and the Valley Peace Coalition; the topic of her presentation will be, "Education in Revolutionary Vietnam."

1st BFA awarded

Years of world-wide travel, teachings at art institutes, and university programs have all been combined to give Ilse H. Schenk of North Reading the first Bachelor of Fine Arts degree (BFA) awarded through the University Without Walls (UWW) program at UMass.

UWW is a three-year-old university program which enables a student to receive a degree without going through traditional channels. Credit is given for life experiences and alternative courses are set up for the student who is unable to attend regular class sessions. Up to now UWW has graduated about 70 persons, all with Bachelor of Science degrees.

Schenk, who will graduate in August of this year, enrolled in the UWW program in September 1974.

'human evolution'

The Psychical Awareness and Research Association will hold a public meeting today presenting a program on Arica — "a training system in conscious human evolution." They will meet at 7:30 p.m. in Room 231 at Herter Hall. A nominal donation will be asked.

Arica takes its name from the desert town Arica, Chile, where, in 1970, fifty Americans underwent an intensive program in psychological development under the direction of Oscar Ichazo. Since then Arica has become an international not-for-profit organization with headquarters in New York and 30 teaching houses in 3 countries.

The aim of Arica training is to produce greater body vitality, to eliminate negative emotions and replace them with positive states, to increase mental clarity, and to create a permanent higher level of awareness. The system used by Arica consists of over 400 exercises derived from both eastern and western techniques for human growth.

The meeting will be conducted by the Amherst Arica teaching House. It consists of a lecture-demonstration with experiential work to be done by the audience.

PARA is an organization dedicated to the investigative exploration and development of the Psi faculty inherent in all mankind. The public is invited to attend PARA's meetings.

Ed Board aid in

Most of the Spring semester Board of Higher Education awards have been received from the Board. If you did not deduct the amount of your award from the semester bill, please stop in the Bursar's Office in Whitmore to pick up the amount due you.

Ad Hoc CC formed

An Ad Hoc Citizens Committee in support of a new Hampshire County Jail and House of Correction has been formed. The committee, headed by former Mayor Durbin Wells of Northampton, expects to gather over 1000 signatures in the next few days from citizens of Northampton to build a new faciltiy on land now owned by the State Hospital.

Its purpose, Mr. Wells states, is to support human conservation and taxpayer relief. Wells asked, "Why should the citizens of Northampton and Hampshire County have to pay one-half million dollars or more for land on which to build the needed institution?"

A similar petition will be circulated throughout Hampshire County Towns. Over 5000 signatures are expected from 19 towns.

VA interns sought

The Northampton Veterans Administration Hospital has long recognized the value of the pre-professional in providing treatment to the physically handicapped in institutions and is dedicated to expanding programs throughout the hospital. The Hospital is actively and energetically working to return patients to the community in as short a time as possible, and assisting patients with continued support systems upon returning to the community.

If you are interested, the Center for Experiential Education can place you at the VA Hospital for one calendar year as an Area Activity Coordiantor. While interning, you can earn a full year of academic credit and a small living allowance. Act immediately! Internships begin in June 1975. Call 545-1381 and ask to speak to Larry Scott or Bruce Shefshick or come in and talk about it. The Center is located at 315 Arnold House.

Community organizers

There will be a meeting for all students who are interested in spending part of their energies next semester as community organizers. The organizing will focus on the department as a community, and students as members of those communities. The meeting will be tonight, at 7:30 in the Academic Affairs Committee room S.U. No. 403.

This past semester several students got together to deal with the problems that students face in presenting their views within the departmental structure. They began by organizing community councils within several departments. These councils are ongoing democratic organizations which are working to bring students together. The organizers are developing their own skills while providing resources, skill development that groups and individuals need during the beginning stages.

The role of a community organizer is perhaps one of the most exciting skills that students can develop as part of their education at the university. The role enhances a students education in general while creating a better educational environment in general for others. Students learn and help others learn how to get things done within a democratic structure, and most importantly, how people solve their problems collectively by working together.

If you are unable to attend this meeting but are interested or want more information call Lynn, Sue or Marty at 545-0341 or 545-2645.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, right, congratulates two outstanding wood technology program students who were awarded Forest Products Research Society (FPRS) memberships. At left is senior Michael D. Hill of Bullitt Rd., Ashfield, and at center is Chris Turletes, a junior, of Haight Ave., Willowbrook, N.Y. The occasion was the recent wood technology program's annual student-alumni-industry banquet in Amherst. FPRS, a national organization, presents paid memberships each year to outstanding students at each of the universities in its 17 regions.

DECISION MAKERS

Tuesday night at 10:30 p.m. Chancellor Randolph Bromery is the guest on Channel 57's DECISIONMAKERS. Chancellor Bromery was interviewed on Monday, May 5, in his office at the Whitmore Administration building.

During the interview the Chancellor touches on the whole range of issues currently facing the University community. He talks at length about Governor Dukakis' proposed ten per cent budget cuts and what effect they might have on academic programs. He also comments on the student protest of the budget cuts and talks about both the student and faculty attempts at unionization.

The Chancellor also talks about the alleged financial and academic abuses at the School of Education brought to light recently by a local newspaper. Various administrators and professors at the school have been charged with abusing federal funds and also lowering academic standards in the granting of degrees in return for special favors.

Immediately following tonight's 10 P.M. News, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will air a pre-taped debate between Hampshire County Commission chairman David Musante and State Representative Charles Flaherty (D-Cambridge), concerning the abolition of county government in Massachusetts.

The hour-long debate, taped at the May 3rd meeting of the Democratic State Committee in Northampton, is being broadcast as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Commissioner Musante spoke in favor of retaining and improving county government. Rep. Flaherty, who is House chairman of the legislature's Committee on Counties, spoke in favor of abolishing county government. Flaherty is presently sponsoring a bill in the legislature, H1864, which would require state take-over of virtually all functions of existing county government in the Commonwealth.

Amherst Democratic Town Committee chairwoman Dolores Sutton served as moderator of the debate.

Rock & Rain is here to stay

By MIKE KOSTEK
& CRAIG ROCHE
Below the Salt Staff

Despite a healthy dash of inhospitable weather, the fine madness known as the Spring Concert made its way through into UMass Sunday afternoon in Alumni Stadium, gripping 10,000 hearty souls in its heady essence. A half-hour spring shower drove about 5000 people home early, at the end of Aztec Two-Step's set around three o'clock, but those who endured were treated to a find time with Sha Na Na, the 1970 greaser's favorite.

The afternoon began in beautiful style, with sunny skies and a cool breeze. The frisbees floated, white stomachs were exposed to the sun, and beer flew down throats. All sorts of highly-illegal substances also found happy homes in happy UMies, who bedded down for a serene day, listening to the soulful jazz-funk of Webster Lewis and the easy folk of Aztec Two-Step. But it was not to be, as an enormous black cloud covered the sun and the rains came, melting the crowd and the sunny time.

The coulds passed over, though, and Sha Na Na came on to pull the day together and make for a tired but satisfying end to a long afternoon.

Not enough can be said in praise of the people of the Concert Committee who put together and held on to their show in a competent, assured manner that must be given the high praise of the "professional" tag.

These folks have hoed a tough row this year, with various shifts in organizations, funding difficulties and the continued spastic support of the UMass administration. They started the show on time, got the groups in and out swiftly, and deserve a thanks from all.

Webster Lewis, who comes from Boston, started off, leading his six-man group through a set that built on the energy of the afternoon with some solid funk that sprang from inspired jazz roots. Aztec Two-Step followed, and had a disasterous show. It's hard enough for two men with acoustic guitars singing some delicate harmonies with no support but a bass player to go over well in a concrete stadium, but the rain came during their eighth song, cutting short their set. Their music was drifting around the crowd to just polite applause before the rain, and you can imagine how they felt playing to the wrong end of a mass exodus.

Sha Na Na is what most came for, and Sha Na Na is what they got. Gold lame suits, greasy black stovepipe dungarees, greasy white socks, hairstyles swimming in grease, greasy elaborate dance routines make for a general light-hearted 50's aura with well-defined personalities (the skinny punk, Daddy Fat Man, truckstop cowboy, etc.)

★ Cooperative Housing

from most responsibility for the buildings, and is assured that its expenses, utilities, insurance, debt service, and management fees will be paid."

Since students themselves would manage the co-operative, high costs of management by the University could be eliminated. UMTA blames inordinately high personnel costs and inefficiency of management for high rents which presently exist. University Apartments allot approsimately $34 of $180 rent for personnel, while private apartments require only $11 for the same.

"I think that the tenants could manage themselves much more efficiently than the University does," claims UMTA spokesperson Karen Forsgard.

Are students capable of managing their own housing? The answer is "yes" according to a report on Student Initiated Housing by the Educational Facilities Laboratories in New York City. The report states that "There have to date been no co-ops or student development corporations failing to meet their mortgage payments in the United States." The report also states that co-ops have provided living costs which are "usually 20-30 per cent below university dormitory rates."

Another advantage to a cooperative system, aside from reduced management costs, is the sense of community residents gain through participation. Many co-ops require members to work a certain number of hours per week in exchange for lowered rents. According to the SCER report, "this not only saves substantial amounts of money, but provides the students with the opportunity to feel proud of, concerned with, and involved in their dormitory's management and maintenance. Students aren't as likely to mess up a living environment if they are the ones who clean it up."

Campus administrators have so far been receptive to the possibility of turning the management of Married Student Housing over to the tenants. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said in a previous interview that he'd "certainly encourage the idea," and is "willing to help out."

What about co-op management of dormitories? Chancellor's staff member Doug Forsyth said "I think its appropriate for both married student housing and the dormitories." Forsyth is currently involved in the negotiations with UMTA for the co-op management agreement.

The success or failure of a dorm co-op is "up to the students who are committed to the cooperative concept," according to Residential Life director Kenneth Dean. He cited the Butterfield dorm dining hall operation as an example of effective resident interaction. "The students there have made it quite a success," he said.

There are many options for student-controlled housing: co-ops can be entirely owned and operated by students, or "arms-length" in which case the co-op is owned by the university but managed by students. According to SCER, a proposal was submitted to create an arms-length co-op in the residence halls during 1973, but no action was taken.

Two years have elapsed since then. Married tenants are heading towards co-operative self management. Will dormitory residents also decide to pursue this alternative to the present system? It has been done on other campuses with a great deal of success. What is needed is enough student unity and initiative to grasp control over this portion of our lives.

According to The Whole University Catalogue, "we can live our lives now on a cooperative, human basis. We can create a community."

Maybe we can, but will we?

It remains to be seen.

★ Lease laws and you

It is expensive and there is no guarantee that he will get his money back. If it goes to court, you may be required to pay your landlord. If he sues, he can also collect the cost incurred in putting the apartment in order, finding a new tenant, and suing you in court.

SECURITY DEPOSITS

If you have a lease, you should first check to see if it is "self-extending." This kind of a lease serves to extend your lease for another year, unless you give your landlord notice that you wish to terminate it.

Unless you owe your landlord rent or have done any unreasonable damage to your apartment, your landlord is required to return your security deposit within 30 days after your tenancy ends. He may deduct the amount of any damage you have caused as well as any unpaid rent. He may not deduct any amount for "reasonable wear and tear." He must also pay you interest at 5 per cent a year for the time, in excess of one year, that he has held the deposit. That is the law on the matter. However, if you think your landlord might not return your security deposit, you might take the initiative and withhold your last month's rent (or your last two month's rent if necessary.) Since it takes a landlord at least a month to evict you if you have only one month's security deposit to get back, you may not have much to worry about.

nuclear power plants. Said Picha, "Once the faculty have tenure, they tend to be more productive and can get down to work."

Picha said that tenure is one thing that attracts people to the University because it is the big difference between an academic and an industrial or governmental job in that it allows the person freedom to do his research. "We're not just competing with other universities for faculty members," he added, "we're competing with the world."

Several faculty members, expressing dissatisfaction with the president and BOT holding the ultimate authority for making tenure decisions, agree that these decisions should be more of a campus matter.

Norman D. Aitken, chairman of the economics department, feels personnel decisions should lie "primarily with faculty, particularly with faculty at the departmental level."

In the view of Joseph Frank, head of the English department, tenure decisions made at the level of the chancellor and president are "so far removed from the actual teaching situation that they may, on occasion, be capricious."

Some modifications of the present tenure system have been proposed by a few faculty members. However, any major review of the system would involve a lot of time, manpower hours, and hard work. Whether faculty and administrators can afford to take time out from their busy schedules is a question best answered by time.

the sixties everyone assure you that you would, but in the "crisis-ridden" seventies all bets are off. The authorities are now saying that their previous analyses were all misconceived; you cannot expect any such "good return" from your investment in yourself. At best all they can offer is a possible increase in what they call your "psychic" income: if you get more schooling you might land a "nicer" if not higher paying job. But even this is not guaranteed, especially since all the "nice," "clean" jobs are becoming uncertain, harder to do, and even dangerous, e.g., teaching.

It is obvious to every student that this attempt to rationalize working for free, or even paying to work, as an "investment good" is a phoney. It is getting harder and harder to convince anyone to shell out money for schooling on the basis of the fairy tale that depicts one as a profit-making corporation. So now both sides of the economists' claim collapse. But in the midst of this debacle, schoolwork gets a new defender from what might seem to be a surprising quarter: the Left.

The "socialist" teacher and the "revolutionary" student have become the staunchest defenders of the public university against "budget cut-backs" and the like. Why? Their story goes something like this: education leads to the ability to make more and broader connections in your social situations; in a word, education makes you more conscious. Since the public universities open up the possibility of having a highly educated working class, these universities make it possible for the working class to become more class conscious. Further, a more conscious working class will pay less attention to the mere "economistic" demands for more money and less work, and pay more attention to the political task of "building socialism." This logic gives the Left both an explanation for the university crisis – capital is afraid of the highly conscious working class the university was beginning to spawn – and a demand – more schoolwork and not less! – So in the name of political consciousness and socialism these leftists intensify schoolwork and frown upon student demands for less of it as capitalist backsliding.

But the Left runs afoul of that old question posed to previous enlighteners of the working class: who shall educate the educators? Since the Left does not start from the obvious (schoolwork is unwaged work) its efforts lead to more unwaged work for capital, to more exploitation. Since all its attempts to increase class consciousness remain oblivious to capital's control on its own ground, the Left ends up consistenly supporting capital's efforts to intensify work, in rationalizing and disciplining the working class. So the "building of socialism" becomes just another device for getting more free work in the service of capital.

Dental Health

The new dental health program of the University Health Services is just completing a highly successful first semester of full operation. Dr. Henry Lubin, Dental Director said the response to the service by student consumers has been overwhelmingly positive, and the demand for services has been so high that not everyone who requested treatment could be accommodated. Since the dental service will be fully staffed by the fall semester, less waiting problem is anticipated. Fall will also bring the expansion of the dental education program into the University community.

The dental health program, which is partially supported by the prepaid health fee, offers a comprehensive range of care with emphasis on preventive aspects of dental health. Services provided by the health fee include emergency care, examination and consultation, oral health education sessions and their follow-up. Consultation is also provided for "soft tissue" conditions (sores, blisters, etc.). Also, any medications that may be needed are prepaid.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by stella wilder

MONDAY, MAY 12 – Born today, you are a highly responsible individual who will forfeit any amount of leisure time, miss out on any amount of fun and frolic, rather than shirk your duty or do less than your level best when it comes to your obligations in general. You enjoy carefree hours as much as anyone -- but you cannot enjoy them at all if and when you fell that they have been purchased at the price of promises unkept, chores undone, and so on. Only when all obligations have been successfully met do you feel "right" indulging your free spirit.

Although you realize the importance of being a good follower, you were born to be a leader and until you really are one you will not know genuine happiness as a result of great personal satisfaction. You have the ability to influence others, to guide them in directions they might not otherwise even have thought of; more important, you have the good sense to realize that such an ability carries with it a tremendous responsibility not to mislead your followers.

You have been considered a "charmer" by many -- but your basic nature is extremely shrewd, even calculating. Thus, you never allow your magnetic personality to stand in the way of your practical ambition. You stand on principle always, but at the same time you never forget that principles can be applied in helping as well as hindering ways insofar as your ultimate success is concerned.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Tuesday, May 13

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Unless you can place your own individual stamp on your work, you may not receive the credit coming to you. Make an effort to be original.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – It is important that you lean on your ethical training today; otherwise, you may not behave in a way that leaves you in the clear upon investigation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Make your word one of assent, especially when it comes to the requests of small children. Say "No" only when absolutely necessary.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be better off tending to domestic issues today, rather than expending your energy on career matters. Keep a promise at evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Unless you are clear about your ultimate goal, you would do well not to make irrevocable commitments. Pay something on an old debt before day's end.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Though you may desire to become involved in social events this evening, you would do well to do your "homework" instead. Realize a small goal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – If you can handle yourself and others in a ticklish situation, you should do well in the first stages of a new project. Learn the ropes in morning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Though you may have developed some strong new interests lately, you would be wise to stick to activities of long standing for the present.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – There is a better than even chance of your making exceptional -- and unusual! -- gains during morning hours. Don't hesitate to accept new responsibility.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Don't allow your personal interests to push the need for performing duties well and promptly too far into the background. Act in morning.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Unless you can decide soon on the question of your immediate future, you may find that you've let time for action pass you by. Think -- and act!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care that you don't force change upon another too rapidly. If you do, you may find reactions too negative to be easily dealt with.

PHILOSOPHY 343-643 A. Ferguson
AESTHETICS

Organization: Lecture-Discussion

Aim: We will examine three different approaches to art and aesthetic experience: The Formalist, Expressionist and Marxist approaches. The aim will be to use the theories to apply to aesthetic problems in different media (music, visual art, literature) and then to test them by applying them in evaluation and interpretation of different works of art in these media. The instructor is a marxist feminist and will be defending her approach, but the class will be encouraged to develop and defend their own views. Special emphasis will be placed on the role of ideology in art and the question of whether there are specific forms and contents which express feminist, socialist and black consciousness.

Readings: Jerome Stollnitz, ed. Aesthetics (a book of readings); Leon Tolstoy, What is Art?, Berel Lang and Forrest Williams, ed. Marxism and Art (marxist writers from Marx to Mao), Georg Lukacs, Realism in Our Time, Hanslick, The Beautiful in Music, Bertolt Brecht, Essays on Theatre. Works such as Wm. Styron's Confessions Nat Turner, Anais Nin's Diaries, Maya Angelou's I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings are examples of specific works of art we may evaluate.

Requirements: Students will be asked to take a specific art work or works within a certain genre and evaluate it in conjunction with the theories of art discussed. They will prepare this as a presentation to the class in conjunction with other students. Other requirements are 2 short papers: one discussing some aspect of the theories of art covered and one summarizing the presentation; and class attendance. Students receive a grade quantitatively: the number of the above items they choose to complete will determine their grade.

Prerequisites: One course in philosophy, in history of art, literature or music is recommended as background. Waived by permission of instructor.

PHILOSOPHY 218-518 R. Robin
AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY

Organization: Lecture-Discussion

Aim: The emergence of American philosophy from European and colonial origins to the present, with emphasis on the idealism, pragmatism, and realism of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Readings: selected from Edwards, Emerson, Royce, Peirce, James, Dewey, Santayana, and others.

Prerequisites: None.

PHILOSOPHY 111 A. Ferguson
SOCIAL THOUGHT

Organization: Lecture-Discussion

Aim: The course will deal with different methods of understanding society and history: materialist, idealist, static, evolutionary and dialectical. We will read thinkers representative of these different approaches and discuss them critically. We will then consider different ideal models from society from these approaches, dealing particularly with the following areas: (1) Love, Sex and the Family, and (2) Ideal modes of production and governance: capitalism, socialism (state vs. worker's control) and anarchism. The instructor is a marxist feminist and will be presenting her views, but the class will be encouraged to develop and defend their own views.

Readings: Writers we will certainly cover are Freud, Wm. Reich, Marx and Engels, Hegel, Mao, Weber, Daniel Bell, Charles Reich. Writers we are likely to include (among others) are Shulamith Firestone, Jill Johnston, Milton Freedman, Emma Goldman and Andre Gorz.

Requirements: Course is graded on a quantitative basis depending on how many items the student chooses to complete from the following: 1 Paper and a Journal; or 2 Papers; Group presentation, Attendance.

Pre-requisites: None.

Islanders catch Philly, tie series

New York Islanders' goalie Glenn Resch slaps the puck away from Philadelphia Flyers' Terry Crisp in yesterday's action. The Islanders won the game, 2-1, to tie the semifinal series at three games apiece, after having been down, three games to none. The seventh game will be played Tuesday night.

Warriors dump Bulls, send series to seven

CHICAGO [UPI] — Golden State Warriors coach Al Attles knew the combination for his team to beat the Chicago Bulls.

"Every time we outrebound them and make fewer mistakes," he said, "we win. And that's that way it's been — when they outrebound us, they make fewer mistakes and they win. It just shows these teams are a little more even than people think."

Sunday the Warriors, even though playing away from home, did just what the coach wanted. They outrebounded the Bulls, they made fewer mistakes and of course they had gunner Rick Barry. So they won, 86-72.

The victory on regional television squared the best-of-seven between the two teams for the National Basketball Association's Western Conference Championship at three wins apiece and as Attles said, "It's down to one game at our place now." The two teams meet on national television Wednesday night on the Warriors court.

"We just went out there to try not to make mistakes," Attles said, "and I told them 'if you miss a shot, don't get discouraged.' They got up by nine, but we were able to get back and keep our concentration."

Barry, hitting a game high 36 points, also had seven steals, three assists and one blocked shot.

"We played a heck of a job on defense," Barry said, "and we rebounded well. I think the secret was defense. We made a few adjustments and they worked very well, and the way we were working on the boards, we didn't give them many second or third chances.

Sox make it seven of eight as Lee taps Angels

ANAHEIM [UPI] — Rico Petrocelli and Rick Burleson each singled home two runs and designated hitter Jim Rice contributed a solo homer Sunday as the Boston Red Sox edged the California Angels 5-2.

Southpaw Bill Lee scattered seven hits in hurling the Red Sox to their seventh victory in eight games. Boston moved back to within one game of first place Milwaukee in the American League East.

Rookie Rice smashed his fifth homer of the year with two outs in the fourth inning off Angels starter Bill Singer. Petrocelli cracked his two-out single with the bases loaded in the sixth inning with what proved to be the winning run. Burleson singled home two runs with two out in the top of the ninth for the final Red Sox runs.

California rallied for two runs off Lee in the bottom of the sixth, but the Boston lefthander held on for his fourth victory against three losses.

A pair of walks and a single by Carl Yastrzemski set up Petrocelli's clutch hit. The Boston third baseman was batting only .162 with five RBIs when he lined a two-run single to left.

Red Sox shortstop dives into California baserunner Mickey Rivers as catcher Bob Montgomery's throw flew wide of the base. The Sox defeated the Angels 5-2, their seventh victory in eight games in their quest for the league lead.

Final Bullet fatal for Celts

LANDOVER, Md. [UPI] — Sharpshooting guards Phil Chenier and Kevin Porter combined for 45 points Sunday as the Washington Bullets knocked the defending champion Boston Celtics out of the NBA playoffs, 98-92.

The 4-2 series victory for the Eastern Conference title puts the Bullets into the NBA Championship playoffs against the winner of the slowdown between the Chicago Bulls and the Golden State Warriors.

Chenier, with 24 points, and Porter with 21, were only two of six Washington players to score in double figures.

After trailing by 18 points in the first half, the Celtics rallied to within five in the final quarter but Chenier hit with key baskets to sew up the win.

Nick Weatherspoon and Elvin Hayes helped out with 15 points apiece, while Dave Cowens led Boston with 23.

Taking advantage of erratic Celtic play and a balanced attack led by Hayes with 14 points, Washington dominated the televised contest from the outset to build a 55-40 margin at halftime.

Before a roaring sell-out home crowd of 19,035, the Bullets took a 6-0 opening edge on a pair of buckets by Hayes and a layup by Kevin Porter. Boston failed to get a field goal until after 3:34 of play.

At the end of that quarter, Washington held a 26-18 lead with Phil Chenier and Mike Riordan leading the way with eight points each.

Meanwhile, the Celtics committed nine turnovers in the first 12 minutes of play and we're shooting only 33 per cent from the field.

After his team stretched the margin to 18 points midway in the second quarter, Bullet coach K.C. Jones rested some of his starters briefly but Boston was unable to cut the gap before intermission.

The Celtics limited Hayes to one free throw in the third period and rallied to within seven points on scoring surges by Cowens and Jo Jo White. Cowens turned in 12 points in the period and White added eight more as the Washington lead was reduced to 73-66.

JV batsmen drop two

By TONY CHAVES

The JV baseball team dropped both games of a Saturday doubleheader at Springfield by scores of 4-2 and 7-5.

In the 4-2 first game loss against their arch-rivals, the JV's quickly found themselves down 2-0 on some scratchy Springfield hits. But Chris Kirby, who started the game for Coach McKay, kept the proceedings on that 2-0 basis until the eighth when the Minutemen tied up the game.

With a man on, hard hitting first baseman Mark Wyner came up and lined a ball to keep left-centerfield. The ball was misjudged by the Springfield centerfielder, who throughout the game looked like he was catching washing machines instead of baseballs. Wyner was credited with a triple and he scored when the relay throw bounced past the catcher to tie the game at two.

Springfield rebounded with two runs in the bottom of the eighth to put the game away. UMass co-captain John Kearney described the Springfield play as "just fine execution."

The first Springfield batter reached first on a single. He was then bunted along and the next batters also came up with singles to account for the final score.

The JV's jumped off to a 4-0 lead after the first two innings on a two run double by Mark Sullivan, a double by Wyner who was having himself another fine day, and some opportunistic hitting by the rest of the team.

Then the team fell apart. In the next three innings Springfield scored six unearned runs against Gordie Smith who started the game and went the route for UMass.

Again some comments from John Kearney, "Gordie pitched well but we let him down on our infield defense; it was a tough game to lose because we wanted the split.

Each team scored one more run in the contest and a mild UMass rally was put down in the last inning.

Participants hustle for space in the Musical Stalls event of the UMass Horse Show last Saturday.

'Fun' horse show draws hundreds

By CHRISTINE DILLARD

Ninety UMass students competed in what riding program director Linda Jaskiel-Hamilton described as a "fun" horse show Saturday.

In addition to the usual equitation events, students competed in such events as Musical Stalls, Simon Says, and Egg and Spoon race and Sit A Buck.

The Advanced Equitation class was won by Janice Schereurs, who recently placed first in the Intercollegiate National Championships. National Maiden Horsemanship champion Jennifer Cracknell placed second in this event.

On a lighter level, 18 riders participated in the Musical Chairs event. Images of Blazing Saddles were brought to mind as 18 horses chaotically scrambled for 17 stalls. Musical Stalls is to horses and riders as musical chairs is to just people. The event was won by Jane Savoie on veteran Bay State Duette — a 19-year old Morgan mare.

The horse show was viewed by a crowd that at one point numbered several hundred. Included in the crowd were grandmothers and children as well as many UMass students. Some ate picnic lunches, while others recorded the events on film.

In some of the other equitation events, Cyndi Cave won the Advanced Jumping class on Trinket. Debbi Slocum on Ralph won second.

Michella LaFortune won the Versatility Class which tests riders on their hunt, balance, and saddle seats. Karen Winn placed second.

The Intermediate II Equitation class was won by Joan Buckley, and second place went to Karen Adams. Intermediate I was won by Marge Day, and second place went to Linda Polzer.

The Beginner II class had two sections. Roberta Sofka placed first in Section A, and Linda Keuch took the blue ribbon in Section B. Beginner I honors went to Linda Buivid.

Linda Buivid also won the Egg and Spoon Race. This event required participants to ride their horses at a walk, sitting and rising trot, and canter.

In the other jumping events, Debra Carr took the blue ribbon for Intermediate II, and Cathy Giard did the same for Intermediate I.

For fastest tacking, Anne Fortune won the Bridle and Saddle race. Simon Says, which is played on horseback the same way you played when you were a kid, was won by Susan Ann Syer. Second place honors went to Michael Lobo.

The Sit A Buck Intermediate I contest went to Michael Lobo, and the Sit A Buck Intermediate II went to Jennifer Cracknell. This event requires the participant to sit on a dollar bill while following the calls for walk, trot and canter.

There were two pair classes, which requires pairs of riders to go through their paces while holding a piece of crepe paper between them. Riders are disqualified if either rider tears or lets go of the paper. Beth McGowan and Karen Adams won the walk, trot and canter, and Linda Keuch and Roberta Sofka won the walk-trot.

The UMass Drill team also rode their Morgans through synchronized movements set to music. In recent years, the UMass Drill Team has performed at the Eastern States Exposition, the Massachusetts Morgan Horse Show, and the New York Morgan Horse Show. All Drill Team members are full time UMass students.

Women's crew ends on low note

By THERESA HANAFIN

Frustration and keen disappointment marked the end of the Women's Crew team's season as they placed third in their heat in the Eastern Women's Sprints yesterday in Middlefield, Connecticut.

The third place finish, behind Dartmouth by only 6-10ths of a second, caused the rowers to miss a spot in the finals.

Instead, they advanced to the second-level final, in which they nipped Syracuse for first place, to finish seventh overall. Syracuse was originally declared the winner, but a video tape replay showed the Minutewomen were victorious.

"It was just so frustrating," remarked co-captain Joanne Andreas after the races. "We had it at the beginning. But with the inexperience in the boat, we just panicked at the end and lost it."

Coswain Nancy Tompkins also felt that they "Had it. . . . we could have done it," she claimed wistfully. "We just fell apart at the end."

Coach Bob Spousta was as disappointed as the women. "We simply didn't row up to our potential."

And that statement summed it up for the female rowers as they twice lost squeakers in the last few strokes. The races were not well rowed, which is frustrating for a crew as good as this one.

The JV also had a disappointing day as they finished fourth in the novice eight event.

"We had a good, controlled start," explained coxswain Kathy Sedlak. "We maintained our position until the halfway mark. Then our balance was off and we fell behind."

"It could have been psychological," pondered Kathy Sedlak. "The varsity loss was such a heartbreaker."

AT THE CATCH . . . Radcliffe won the varsity heavyweight eight finale with a time of 3:00.8 . . . Rose Sellew's beginning boat also raced in the novice eight event in what Rose termed their "best race yet." The girls were really together and did not "crab" once.

Gorillas toy with MIT, laugh to 22-5 mauling

By SCOTT HAYES

Defensemen Bill Blaustein and Ken Michaud on attack? Attackmen Pete Connolly and Billy O'Brien playing defense? Or leading scorer Jeff Spooner in goal? These were some of the strange positions UMass lacrossers found themselves playing, Saturday afternoon in Cambridge, as they humiliated MIT, 22-5.

The game was decided in the first quarter as UMass charged to a 5-0 lead in just four minutes and four seconds of action. Terry Keefe and Frank Garahan had outstanding first periods, scoring three goals apiece. O'Brien netted two goals while Mike Lettera, John Martin, Kevin Patterson and Connolly chipped in with one tally each. Two of Keefe's goals were fan-pleasers, even though there were few spectators to appreciate his efforts. Keefe's first score came on a twisting, behind-the-back shot and less than two minutes later, the UMass midfielder scored on another turn around slot.

Coach Dick Garber began substituting freely at the start of the second period and the rest of the game resembled a practice more than an official contest. Goalie Jim Haddad made a big save early in the period with MIT enjoying a two-man advantage, but Bob Connor scored for the Engineers minutes later to break the shutout. Patterson scored twice in the period and Bob Morse scored on a high shot which came at the gun ending the first half.

Jeff Spooner started in goal in the third quarter. UMass outscored MIT 3-1 in the period and the most exciting action came when Haddad escaped a collision near midfield that left two opponents prone on the field.

Bob Morse replaced Spooner in goal in the final period and MIT cut the margin to 19-5 when Morse failed to handle a shot by George Braun. John McCarthy added two goals to the UMass total in the last fifteen minutes.

MIT netminder Jeff Singer stopped 16 shots as the Gorillas fired 51 attempts toward the Engineer net, 38 of which were on goal. Haddad saved 10 shots by opponents while Spooner was credited with one save.

Tim Murphy played a solid game defensively, as UMass thwarted the sometimes non-existent MIT offense. Chuck Smith played a fine game, scoring once, showing some good moves and speed as well as picking up a pair of assists. Bobby Durland got into the act and managed a few somewhat weak shots from his middle position.

O'Brien took advantage of the opportunity to boost personal statistics, scoring two goals and adding four assists. Spooner had four assists while Keefe, Patterson and Garahan combined for nine goals. John Martin scored twice and added an assist as the stickers improved their record to 8-3.

Lettis captures NY marathon

By SCOTT HAYES

Former UMass standout runner Charlotte Lettis won New York's Mini-Marathon, a 10,000-meter race held in Central Park on Saturday, by placing first among a large field of 310 women harriers.

Lettis outdueled Jacki Hansen, a runner from Southern California who previously held the record for women in the Boston Marathon. Lettis was running among a pack of five runners that became separated after the two-mile mark. Hansen and Lettis continued step for step until the 300-yard mark, where Lettis kicked and bettered her opponent by seven seconds. Lettis covered the 6.2 mile loop around Central Park in 35:56.6 for her biggest personal achievement.

Other finishers from the Sugarloaf Athletic Club, which finished sixth in the team standings, included Merry Cushing (24th), Marion Kulick (41), Linda Eiben (59), Marianne Wilcox (68), Cindy Hastings (69) and Julie LaFreniere (72). Carla White finished in the 94th spot while Lila Peasell (113), Johara Chapman (117), Ann Eiben (129), Cathy Dooley (137) and Loretta Eiben (149) were also among the top 200 finishers.

Members of the UMass women's swim team also competed. Finishers were Carole Olesby (193), Laurelen Celuk (215), Mary Ellen Dash (216), Janet McGrath (218), Carol Leahy (222) and Jackie Diggs (255).

A total of 21 women from UMass and the Sugarloaf team finished the race, which is one of the biggest road race in the world for women.

Last Thursday, the Sugarloaf trackwomen finished second in a tri-meet at Springfield. Fitchburg State won the meet with 63½ points while Sugarloaf topped New Hampshire in the battle for second, 57-32½. Coach Tom Derderian attempted to utilize a strategy that would score enough points in the running events to negate the lack of participants in the field events, but the move failed.

Lettis had another exceptional day, taking first place in the two-mile, mile and 880-yard run. Karen Keith won the 100-yard dash in 11.9.

Golfers gain NCAA qualification

By RON ARENA

The UMass golf team, in fourth place after one day of competition at the Hanover Country Club, shot their way to a second place finish and a berth in the Nationals in June.

The Minutemen, who trailed Rhode Island, Dartmouth, and Harvard after the first 18 holes, battled their way back with an impressive 297 total on the final day to overtake everyone but the Crimson. Harvard, on the strength of a 296 Friday, captured the top spot with a 36-hole score of 603, edging UMass by two strokes.

For UMass, the situation created a nerve wracking experience. They were quite aware that a good round was necessary for any hopes of a qualification (Coach Fan Gaudette had predicted a 298 would be needed). So when Joe Artman opened up with a four-over par on his first four holes, when Rick Olson found himself seven-over after the eighth, and when John Lasek carded a nine on the 13th, the scene appeared bleak.

Joe Artman

But Artman, who on his 5th tee, claimed he was "really scared" and didn't want to blow it for his teammates, played the par-70 course even the rest of the way, and finished with a 74. Olson went one-over after the 8th, finishing with a 78, and Lasek, despite his bad hole, shot a 78 (which eventually was not used in the final tally). Add Howie Terban's fine 74 and the outlook began to improve.

Meanwhile, first round leader Rhode Island, had completed their day with a 306, giving them a 609 total. With all but one Minuteman finished, simple arithmetic indicated that a 74 was the magic number needed to overtake the Rams.

Freshman Glen Sullivan, by virtue of being the final UMass player on the course, earned the chance to offer the deciding score. Apparently, he decided on UMass to finish in the top two.

Through the 16th, Sullivan was scored at two-over. He responded with a birdie on the 17th, a par on the 18th, for a 71, and ultimately a summer trip to Columbus for he and his teammates.

Waiting for Sullivan to finish caused tense times for the UMass team. Revealed Gaudette, "It was as tough a day as I've ever had coaching. This meant so much to us — we wanted to go to the Nationals and we wanted to play the best. And all we could do was wait."

Howie Terban

But as they say, it's worth waiting for a good thing (No, not the beer in the clubhouse, but the Nationals). At the outset of the spring campaign, all attention had really been focused on the NCAA, and after a month and a half of competition, the goal has been reached. Commented Gaudette, "That was our big goal, to get to the Nationals. Now we're going, and we'll really find out how good we are."

UMass will have a full month and a half to get ready for the 72-hole competition, in which they hope to work on their game with endless practice. Certain players will be performing in tournaments until then, such as the State Amateur Title, and the "Hornblower", both described by the coach as tough tournies.

NATIONAL NOTES...URI finished in third place, three strokes from a qualification. They were followed by: Dartmouth (611), Yale (615), Boston College (620), Providence (624), Fairfield (634), New Hampshire (639), and Connecticut (641).

In the individual competition, Yale's Steve Sherrill topped the pack with a 75-67-142. Jerry Daly of Dartmouth shot a 69-74-143, and he, along with Sherrill, earned a berth in Columbus.

Crewmen place second in Dad Vail competition

By BOB NORTON

The long hard season, as they say, came to an end Saturday for the UMass men's crew. Coxwained by Rich Berg, stroked by Steve Loomer, with Mike Melvin at seven seat, John Hill at six, John Moynihan at five, Dick Suess at four, co-capts Bill Fitzpatrick at three and Paul Gowen at two, and Pete Berg at bow seat, the crew finished second in the College Rowing Nationals this weekend, failing to defend their Dad Vail Title Championship of two successive years.

Over 5,000 spectators saw the two day regatta which was held last Friday and Saturday on the Schuylhill River in Philadelphia.

On Friday morning UMass easily won a preliminary heat against Florida Technical Univ., Drexel University, Temple University, and Williams College and advanced to the afternoon's semi-final.

Once again the crew was victorious with a time of 6:28 in a strong head wind and moderate current.

The jayvees were the next to race and UMass won that heat in 6:24.3 against Georgetown University, Temple University, Marist College, Trinity College, and La Salle College to advance to the finals.

The crew went on to place every boat they entered — including a freshman and varsity four and a varsity pair — into the finals.

On Saturday, the conditions varied in the partly sunny skies from a slight headwind in the morning to a strong tailwind by the varsity finals. The varsity four won their semifinal heat with a time of 7:34.5 as the only UMass competitor of the morning.

To begin the finals the Freshman four, coxwained by Rich Baltimore, stroked by Mike Hynes, with Bill Carrington at three, Pete Kirk at two and Chris Brackett in bow fell behind early and finished fifth.

The varsity pair event saw Peter Flood and Bob Norton encounter a stiff headwind and sloppy water while finishing sixth in the nation.

Next to race was the freshman eight. The seven boat race found UMass taking a wide turn at the bridge from a floating start to finish fifth. That shell was coxwained by Rich Berg with Frank Miconi at stroke, Tom Finn at seven, Jeff Temple at six, Charles Anderson at five, Rich Chambers at four, Steve Trackleton at three, Elwell Perry at two and Dave Balukonis at bow seat. The frosh were nearly kept from the finals when a protest of disqualification was upheld against Marietta College. As it was, they were forced to race in a new and longer lane.

The Jayvees aided by a building tailwind placed second to the Coast Guard Academy with a time of 6:02.2. Sophomore Mark Lyle coxwained. The eight was stroked by Jim Bouzianis, with Ray Maagero at seven, Doug Frost at six, Kevin Connor at five, Dave Burke at four, Dave Ferguson at three, Dave Snyder at two and Bill Vose in bow seat.

The varsity four was down at the 1000 meter mark but put together a furious final sprint to lock up the only first place finish for UMass on the day. The four, coxwained by Andy Burton, with Ted Mone at stroke, Ron Brooks at three, Dave Assad at two, and Bob Cullen in bow seat, earned gold medals with their performance.

In the varsity heavyweight final, the U.S. Coast Guard Academy shot out to a length lead at the 800 meter mark and steadily lengthened their lead with the strong tailwind to finish the 2000 meter course in a torrid 6:44.3. UMass placed second, four tenths of one second ahead of Ithica College.

The Cadets also won the Jack Bratton Point Trophy, awarded to the school accumulating the largest number of points for place finishes with 21. Florida Institute of Technology finished next with 18, edging UMass by one point.

UMass trackman Tom Lonergan finished behind two of New England's premier hammermen in Saturday's meet against Northeastern.

Injured tracksters edged by Northeastern

By MIKE BERGER

For many of Coach Ken O'Brien's injured tracksters, Saturday track meets following Wednesday dual meets are not exactly looked forward to. On a warm partly cloudy ten - mile - per - hour - wind running - into - the faces - of - the - runners type of day, UMass was defeated in a highly competitive meet 80-74. Following Wednesday's cakewalk over URI, many of the trackmen (at least twenty) were still hurting from assorted muscle and hamstring pulls, thus preventing them from performing at top efficiency.

As expected, Northeastern was exceptionally strong in the field events and distance races while UMass dominated the jumps, relays and springs.

In the hammer thrown, Tom Lonergan placed third against two of New Englands best hammer throwers — Boris Djerassi and Bill Johston. Djerassi, in winning the event, let go a throw of 214 feet to set a Llewyln Derby track record.

Northeastern continued to dominate the field events through Bill Johston and teammate Jeff Bramnick 1-2 performance in the javelin and a sweep of Doug Rao, Mark Hackett and Paul Krupa in the discus. Rao, Hackett, and Dennis Dupont also went 1-2-3 in the shot. UMass' Todd Holt, in an attempt to stem the tide, placed third in the javelin, with a throw of 200 feet, 11 inches, just two feet behind second place.

UMass Dan Grigus displayed his continual improvement with a second place vault and Rusty Kendall managed to place third in the high jump with a jump of 6-2.

The combination of the two Adamsons, Ken and Bob, and Mike Geraghty gave UMass a sweep in the long jump with Bob Adamson's jump of 23-feet, 7 and one-quarter, being the top long jump of the day. Bob also jumped 47-½' to come away with first place honors in the triple jump. Teammate Mike Geraghty and Pete Ryan completed the sweep with second and third place showings.

The distance races were quite an exhibition of talent as Chris Farmer beat out Northeastern's Mike Buckley and Bob Flora with a 4.08.7 time to establish a new Derby Track record. For three and a half laps, Farmer stayed five yards behind Buckley. As he approached the last straightaway, Farmer's strength and gliding stride overtook Buckley to take the lead and give UMass an emotional boost.

The morale lift grew as Tom Beland, Ken Adamson, and Ron Harris sprinted to a sweep in the 100, with Beland being top man at a 10.3 clocking. Tommy also placed 1st in the 220 with a time of 22.6 seconds.

Joe Martens, coming off a severe hamstring pull, turned in a great performance of 49 seconds as did Steve Crimmins 49.9 effort to give UMass a 2nd and 3rd place showing in the event.

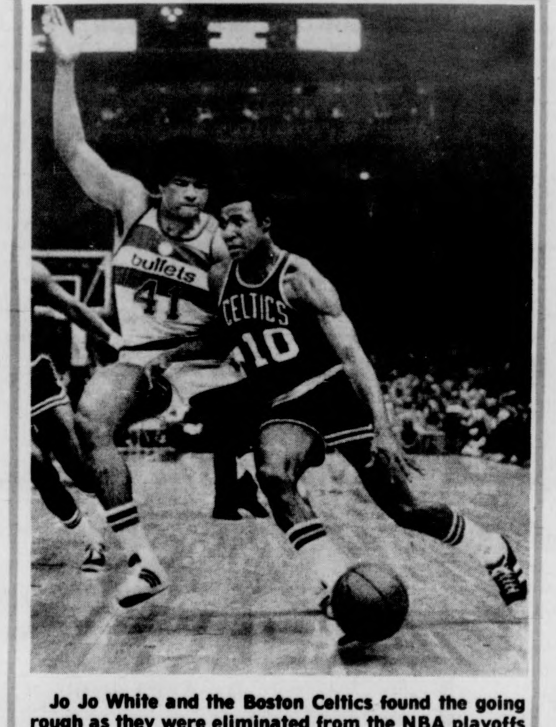
UMass momentum continued as Curt Stegerwald and Chris Nelson raced to a first and third place finish respectively in the 120 high hurdles. Teammate Pete Famulari pulled a hamstring during the race and thus dispelled hope for a UMass sweep.

Stegerwald again proved why he is number two in New England in the 440 intermediate hurdles with a 53.4 clocking. Mark Healy and John Richards performed their personal bests with times of 54 sec. and 54.9 to complete the sweep in the event.

Trailing here by eight points, 65-57, Northeastern exploded back with the 1, 2 efforts of Mike Hickey and Kevin Stolley to offset the UMass lead. Jim Hunt did preserve the lead with a 1.54.8 third place run just one second off the leader.

UMass's John Scheer ran his best two-mile of the year (9.09) to gain third place but Northeastern went 1-2 through Ken Flanders and John Flora, and thus clinched the victory for Northeastern.

The 440 relay (Ken Adamson, Mark Healy, Ron Harris, and Tom Beland) and the mile relay of Steve Crimmin, Danny Cristo (excellent leg), Mark Healy and Curt Stegerwald crossed the finish line way ahead of Northeastern's units to aid in the UMass scoring.



Jo Jo White and the Boston Celtics found the going rough as they were eliminated from the NBA playoffs yesterday. See story on page 18.

Alien Creature?

This micrograph was recorded by an ETEC U-1 Scanning Electron Microscope. The spider, which has been gold coated, was observed at 20,000 electron volts and the magnification is 100X. Please note the fine detail; it would be possible to display any point within the limits of the above micrograph with the same image quality. The ultimate resolution for this system is about 100 Angstroms or 1-10,000,000 of a millimeter or 1-40,000,000 of an inch. One could observe the surface of a human hair as if it were 110 meters in diameter or about the length of a football field.

The scanning electron microscope is a new addition to the Materials Research Library which is funded by a National Science Foundation grant in the Polymer Science and Engineering Department of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Cambos Grab Mayaguez

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An unarmed American merchant vessel reported yesterday it had been seized under fire by a Cambodian naval vessel. President Ford termed it "an act of piracy" and warned of "serious consequences" unless the ship is promptly released.

Announcement of the incident came from White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, who said the container ship Mayaguez, had been fired on, seized on the high seas and taken into the Cambodian port of Kompongsom along with its American crew.

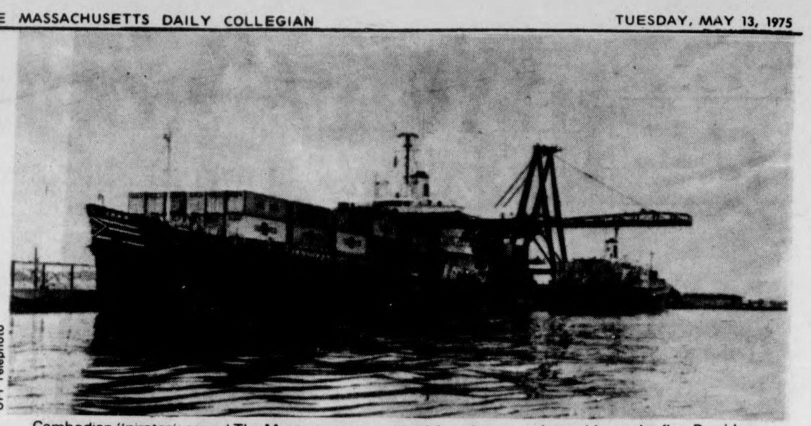
There were immediate demands from some members of Congress that the administration take quick action to assure release of the ship and crew. A State Department spokesman said "we are taking immediate steps" along that line, but declined to elaborate.

Pentagon sources, however, said the aircraft carrier Coral Sea and several other ships had been ordered to sail for the Gulf of Thailand, where the seizure occurred.

They said the ship movements did not mean the United States had decided to use force — that it is standard procedure to send ships to a trouble spot so that if they are eventually needed, they will be available.

Sources said a primary concern was to win the release of the crew, indicating use of force was low on the list of options since the Cambodians could easily retaliate by punishing the crew.

Sen. James L. Buckley, R-N.Y., urged Ford to "order immediate punitive air and naval attacks on appropriate targets in Cambodia," saying "in no other way can we underscore the fact that we will no longer tolerate acts of international banditry."



UPI Telephoto

Cambodian "pirates' seized The Mayaguez, an unarmed American merchant ship, under fire. President Ford has warned of "serious consequences" if the ship is not returned immediately.

Retired Navy Cmdr. Lloyd Bucher, whose spy ship USS Pueblo was captured by North Koreans in 1968 and its skipper and crew held prisoner for a year, said "Our reaction has to be positive and swift.

"Retaliation of some sort should be expeditiously applied," Bucher told National Public Radio. "Dispatch the necessary people and material to that area immediately and return the ship without fail and the people on board."

Nessen told reporters at the White House that Ford "considers this seizure an act of piracy." He said the President held an emergency 45-minute meeting with the National Security Council, and warned that failure of the Cambodians to immediately release the vessel "will have the most serious consequences." Like the State Department spokesman, Nessen declined to spell out what alternatives the President had in seeking return of the ship, owned by Sea-Land Inc. of Menlo Park, N.J.

Later, Nessen said there had been no contact, directly or indirectly, with the Khmer Rouge government which took control in Cambodia after the American-backed regime fell.

Asked if the freighter might have carried intelligence equipment for a spy mission, Nessen said: "The answer is a flat no."

He described the Cambodian vessel as a "gunboat" but offered no further description.

Warren Gulko blames increases on "significant inflationary pressures."

Fee Charges Skyrocket

Inflation Villain: Gulko

By WILLIAM MILLS
Finance Reporter

Fee increases in room and board rates and a host of other cost increases is called for in the annual Fee Based Budget Report, according to Warren Gulko, UMass budget director.

In the report, compiled by the budget committee a $25 to $30 increase is requested in dorm room fees because of "significant inflationary pressures." Also, a $39.50 increase for the Ten Meal Plan is asked.

On May 27, a joint meeting of the budget committee and the trustees finance committee will convene to review the report. If approved there, the entire board of trustees will vote on the rate increases June 4. According to Gulko, the increases will "most likely" be approved by the trustees.

Principal Administrative Offices reviewed the report recently and made "no changes," Gulko said.

Other rate increases include: — a $50 per semester increase in the Graduate Program fee to "support increasing expenses of student services."

— An increase of $4 in the Graduate Student Senate Tax.

— A $2 per year increase in dorm telephone trust fund due to "anticipation of rate increases recently requested by New England Telephone Co."

— Increase of Stockbridge Student Tax by $9 per year.

— An increase in Married Student Housing rentals ranging from $7 to $12.50 per month which "will crease $37,600 in additional revenue."

— A $.05 per hour increase in Campus Center Parking Garage rates "will generate $21,000 in additional revenue."

The report also called for the establishment of a 14 Meal Board Plan and a 19 Meal Board Plan to "provide students with maximum flexibility in their meal choice." The 14 meal plan will cost $368 per semester and $403 per semester for the 19 meal plan. The ten meal plan will cost $328 per semester.

When asked if the Fee Based Budget Report has been, in the past, voted on after the students have completed classes and gone home for the summer, Gulko said it has not. However, may student organizations such as Rents and Fees Committee, have worked on the budget, Gulko said.

Profs Agog Over 'Need'

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

This is the second in a series of articles which will discuss the tenure system at UMass. The first article appeared in Friday's Collegian.

The recent introduction of the concept of "institutional need" as a criteria for tenure recommendations has triggered many questions and reactions among faculty and administrators. Some of the most important questions that need to be answered are: What is "institutional need?" Where did the concept come from? What influence has it had on this year's tenure decisions, and what effect might it have in the future?

The concept of "institutional need" as such first surfaced this year in the original draft of the Academic Personnel Policy (APP) document. Requested by University President Robert C. Wood several years ago, this document was prepared by a Multi-Campus committee (MCC), composed of representatives of the faculty, administration, and students from all three campuses.

Political science professor John M. Maki is one of the three UMass Amherst representatives to the MCC. He feels the emergence of the concept of "institutional need" is related to the question of financial resources.

"In the sixties, no one ever heard of the phrase "institutional need" as applied to personnel problems because all institutions were in good shape financially. But people really became conscious of its being used as a basis for decisions in the awarding of tenure this year due to state and national fiscal problems," he said.

However, the concept of "institutional need" is not a new one. Former Provost Robert L. Gluckstern issued a tenure statement in December 1972 which reaffirmed the "concept of tenure and its award on the basis of distinction in teaching, in service to the University and the Commonwealth, and quality of scholarship." It further required that "recommendations for tenure be presented to the Board (of Trustees) in the context of long-term staffing plans and program needs of the campus."

While the tenure criteria have basically remained the same, the second draft revision of the APP document states that reappointments and awards of tenure shall be reviewed within the context of "current and long-range plans of the relationship of the recommended personnel action to the following:

— program plans at the department, college, campus, and University level;

— projected department and college size in terms of rank and age distribution and tenure percentage and their effect on departmental flexibility; and — departmental affirmative action goals."

Although the phrase "institutional need" has virtually been phased out of the final revised version of the APP document, faculty will continue to be evaluated according to how well they meet the projected needs of their department and school or college.

Faculty members, cognizant of the importance of determining the long-range needs of the University, also feel that the maintenance of flexibility, especially at the departmental level, is essential.

Duke Awaits Student Cut Input

By PAUL BRADLEY
State House Reporter

Several top state officials, including the Governor, are awaiting the onslaught of UMass student leaders who will be taking the protest of the proposed 10 per cent budget cut back to Boston this Thursday.

The meeting comes on the heels of a visit by Dukakis to the UMass campus where he had insisted that he wants the input of students on the budget cut decisions.

Among the eleven student leaders going to Boston will be John O'Keefe, president of the student government; John Pepi of the Student Organizing Project; Barbara Stack, president of the graduate student senate; and Carrie Rothenberg, student trustee from the Boston campus.

The UMass representatives will meet with Dukakis, Lt. Governor Thomas "Tip" O'Neil, Senate President Kevin Harrington, House Speaker David Bartley, Secretary of Human Services Lucy Benson, and Secretary of Education Paul Parks.

In addition to discussions about the budget cuts it is reported that endorsement of a student union by the Governor will be sought. Such approval from Dukakis would help in achieving UMass Trustee approval, according to the student leaders.

Although specific budget proposals are not expected to be finalized by Thursday's meeting, the group is hopeful that some general proposals pertaining to the budget will be discussed.

An early morning meeting today in the Council Chambers of the Student Union will provide a forum for the group to get together and formulate a plan of action,

Seek Suspects for Glue Attack, Tower Drop

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Police Reporter

A UMass student nearly met death this weekend in a bizarre incident that remains unsolved, while in another less violent but stickier development, a woman was assaulted in the Bluewall.

Neither case has brought a suspect into custody yet, but the UMass police did make fourteen arrests including some non-students for drunkenness, and motor vehicle violations.

In a macabre attempt on his life a UMass student was nearly killed when a four pound weight was dropped from Washington Tower, almost hitting him in the head, according to Larry Holmes, technical assistant at the UMass police department.

"If the weight had hit the guy, he would have been killed," Holmes said.

In an unrelated incident a woman was accosted in the Bluewall by an unidentified assailant who sprayed liquid cement into her hair.

Of the fourteen arrests, four UMass students and six non-students were placed under protective custody for drunkenness, during the weekend.

Three non-students were arrested for driving under the influence, and one UMass student was arrested for operating a motor vehicle without a license, and speeding, according to police reports.

Malicious destruction to property and motor vehicles was numerous this weekend, Holmes said.

Speakers to Grace Grads

By WILLIAMS MILLS
Special to the Collegian

Amherst — Cynthia A. McGrath and William H. Foster have been chosen 1975 student Commencement Day speakers by the Student Matters Committee, according to Mollie Gray, chairperson of the committee.

McGrath will speak on 'The Meaning of a True Education,' regarding population, resources and humanity, and Foster's topic will be 'Which Way Black College Grad?' He will answer the question "Now what will we do?" Gray said.

After interviewing 10 student speaker candidates, the matters committee "made the really hard decision" of choosing the speakers who had to submit a paper on why they wanted to speak at the commencement.

Foster and McGrath were chosen out of the field of applicants because "we (the committee) thought these two presented themselves the best and had a general topic which would be of interest to everybody in attendance," Gray said.

The committee liked McGrath's and Foster's topics, poise and ability to speak in front of people, according to Gray.

McGrath, 22, an English major from Avon, said she was "pleased" after being selected. The former student Senate Speaker said, "I think I have a lot to say and I'm looking forward to it."

Foster, a Forensic Society member majoring in Communications Studies, is 22 from Philadelphia. He was "really happy" with the committee's decision and said "it is a big thing for my mother." Foster said he'd "really like to answer his topic for himself" as well as for the people at the commencement.

Daniels' Re-trial Set for Fall

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

The new second-degree murder trial of Belchertown State School resident Russell Daniels originally scheduled for mid-April, is now set for "the second or hopefully the third week in September, "according to UMass professor Benjamin Ricci, president of the Belchertown State School Friends Association.

The 30 year old black mentally retarded man was convicted last year for the 1972 slaying of 83 year old Klara Haas of Springfield. His conviction came solely on the basis of a "confession" which police wrote after seven hours of interrogation.

Police testimony at the first trial indicated that Da[illegible] was unable to read the written confession. It was read to him.

"We're in the process of getting more information, contacting experts and administering tests," said Ricci who financed Daniels' first trial. There have been no results yet from the tests which are being conducted to measure Daniels' level of comprehension.

Dr. Burton Blatt of Syracuse University department of special education is administering some of the tests, while people in law, psychology and medicine including a team from the Children's Hospital in Boston have talked with Daniels, trying to gain his confidence in preparation for other tests, according to Ricci.

"Approximately $3,000 has been raised so far," said Ricci, "but this is just the bare bones, just the beginning. We're getting returns on the sale of buttons and special mailings."

Fund-raising is being handled by "The Boston Eight," a group of seven professional fund raisers who estimated this winter that $8,000 could be brought in from the five-college area. About ten UMass students have been instrumental in generating publicity about the trial in the Amherst area.

Ricci believes the trial will force the courts to distinguish between mental illness and mental retardation.

Israelis Nab Woman in Raid

By The Associated Press

Israeli troops raided three Lebanese border villages before dawn yesterday and brought back five suspected Arab guerrillas, including a woman, for questioning, the Israeli command said.

In Tel Aviv, a fire bomb exploded on the roof of a youth club, slightly wounding a 15-year-old boy, police said. Five other bombs, made from Israeli-made mortar charges, were found nearby, they said. There was no immediate explanation.

A command spokesman in Tel Aviv said the "overnight antiterrorist operation" started before sunrise and lasted into the daylight hours.

One of the suspected terrorists was a doctor, the spokesman said, but he gave no details or identities. Reports from Beirut said the Israelis abducted Dr. Ahmed Murad, a Politburo member of the Lebanese Communist party.

The Israelis denied Beirut reports that six persons were captured and a cafe blown up, but "nothing was blown up. It was quick and simple," the spokesman said.

The Israelis said they raided the villages of Bint Jbail, Ait el-Shaab and Yarin, about two miles across the border in the central sector. Reports from Lebanon agreed on the first two villages but listed the third as Ait Around.

It was the first admitted Israeli incursion into southern Lebanon in four months. The Israeli command spokesman declined to comment on Lebanese charges that Israeli troops had crossed the border several times in the past five weeks to lay mines.

The latest incident was the first serious clash since January when the Israelis repeatedly infiltrated into Lebanon and forced the evacuation of Chouba village, an alleged guerrilla stronghold.

During December and January raids the Israelis brought back more than 15 suspected terrorists for questioning but they were later released and sent back across the border.

Laos Reds Clamp Vise Over Army

VIENTIANE, Laos [UPI] — The Communist Pathet Lao used its new position of power in the Laotian coalition government yesterday to tighten its grip on non-Communist military forces. The commander of the army quickly followed its orders.

Prince Souvanna Phouma, the neutralist premier of the last non-Communist nation in Indochina, meanwhile broadcast a radio appeal for calm to Laotians and foreigners panicked by the political deterioration in Laos.

Kham Ouane Boupha, the Pathet Lao member named as acting defense minister following the resignation of four rightist members of the coalition, issued a communique forbidding movement of loyalist — non-Communist — war equipment and troops.

"All officers and men should be prepared to follow my orders," the communique said.

It demanded that military units declare loyalty to the coalition and the National Political Consultative Council controlled by the Pathet Lao and warned of punitive action against troops for disobeying its orders.

After the communique was broadcast on the national radio, the army commander, Lt. Gen. Bounpone Makphepharak, ordered that Kham Ouane's directives be followed.

Bounpone is a rightist general who so far has survived the purge of several military leaders that accompanied the cabinet resignations.

CIA Tame, With 'Major Exceptions'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The vice chairman of the Rockefeller commission said yesterday it was his opinion that with "one or two major exceptions," the CIA never engaged in massive domestic spying.

C. Douglas Dillon, talking with reporters as the commission completed its 18-week investigation of the CIA, said the inquiry had uncovered "no major surprises" beyond original published reports last December that the agency was involved in wiretapping and opening of mail from private citizens.

Dillon said the commission thoroughly investigated allegations the CIA was involved in plots to assassinate foreign leaders, and centered on such reports involving Cuban Premier Fidel Castro. He did not divulge the commission's findings.

The former Treasury secretary, second-ranking member of the special presidential commission headed by Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller, said the commission probably would not shed any new light on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

"Was there any indication of massive lawbreaking — domestic spying by the CIA?" Dillon was asked.

"Not in my opinion," he replied, "My own personal opinion, which is not necessarily that of the commission, is that with one or two rather major exceptions, everything that was done was rather peripheral and connected in one way or another with the legitimate work of the agency.

"The allegation is that the agency was devoting a major part of its time on domestic areas when it was supposed to be operating abroad," Dillon said. "I don't think this was the case."

Hub Schools to Explode in Race War: Garrity

Compiled From Wires

BOSTON — U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity yesterday urged school and police officials to act to alleviate a potentially "explosive situation" at two racially troubled Boston high schools.

Events last week at South Boston and Hyde Park high schools led him to believe that racial violence could be triggered unless authorities acted to prevent it, said Garrity, who ordered 17,000 students bused this fall to partially desegregated Boston schools.

The two schools have been the rallying point for anti-busing demonstrations since the court order to desegregate Boston public schools by busing.

Meanwhile, the Supreme Court let stand the decision by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity that began the sometimes disruptive process last fall of desegregating the Boston school system.

Garrity said at a hearing that he would consider any request by the school superintendent to order the closing of the two most potentially volatile high schools — South Boston and Hyde Park. However, no such request has been made.

Schools had been relatively peaceful through the winter and early spring until last week, when about 500 demonstrators tried to block the entrance to South Boston High.

Then, on Saturday, Garrity released a new integration plan for next fall that requires the busing of 21,000 pupils, about 4,000 more than are now being bused.

Garrity said that tensions in the schools, already building for several days, were heightened by his new integration plan.

The current situation, he said, "parallels the course of events that led to the tragic episode at South Boston High last December when there was almost a life lost in a stabbing."

The judge added, "The court feels that it has an obligation to do whatever it can to head off an explosive situation in two of the schools that could cause serious injury to young people."

Teen Escapade Yields Deaths, $

CHICAGO (UPI) May 11 — Five teenagers took advantage of one of the sunniest days of the year to enjoy a spring outing in a suburban forest preserve.

It triggered a bizarre chain of events in which:

— Three persons drowned;

— A rescue worker died of a heart attack;

— A scuba diver looking for the bodies of the drowning victims stumbled on a water-logged footlocker containing about $50 million in stolen bonds.

Divers still searched Sunday for the body of Theresa Swiatek, 17, who was swept into the Des Plaines River near the northwest suburb of Rosemont along with a companion Friday when the two tried to make their way across a dam on foot while with three other teenagers.

The swirling current was too strong. Their companions tried to rescue them, but had to be pulled to safety themselves.

The body of Miss Swiatek's companion, Jesse Kruk, 18, was recovered late in the day.

As members of the Cook County sherrif's police, Forest Rangers, local fire and police departments and civil defense units converged on the scene to renew their efforts Saturday, a 14-year-old boy drowned in the same spot.

Edwin Moll, chief of the county Forest Rangers, said a ranger had been standing at the dam until moments before the boy paddled his canoe downstream, but the ranger left his post to check out a report that Miss Swiatek's body had been spotted.

Authorities said young Ronald Egan paddled his canoe too close to the dam, the current pulled the craft over and it capsized.

During the search for the drowning victims, divers recovered a battered footlocker containing 4,198 bonds stolen from a printing firm in suburban Countryside last August.

The bonds were public improvement bonds, printed for the city of Houston, Tex., with a face value at maturity in 1984 of about $50 million. Current face value would be $21 million.

Shortly after the bonds were recovered, George Beardsley, 40, director of the Illinois Scuba rescue and Recovery Unit, collapsed at the scene. He was dead on arrival at Resurrection Hospital, apparently of a heart attack.

Pieface Assassin Misses Professor; Charges Filed

LAWRENCE, Kan. [UPI — May 7] — University of Kansas student James P. Dillard was a hitman for hire — a crusty veteran of the Brotherhood of Pieface Assassins.

But the psychology student from Springfield, Mo., committed the hitman's nightmare: He missed and then allowed himself to be identified.

The bad aim cost him $20. The identification may cost him six months in jail.

"There was a contract on him, that is, I was paid to make the hit," Dillard said of the Monday incident. "But I didn't get paid because I didn't hit him in the face."

Dillard said his weapon, a chocolate cream pie, hit Dr. David Holmes in the left thigh. His clients would have paid him $20 if the pie had been on target.

Holmes, 35, a psychology professor, was not amused at the latest campus fad. He filed battery charges against Dillard after the incident.

"If this kind of behavior is not stopped, it might have a snowballing effect," Holmes said. "It was illegal and inappropriate. I have won a lot of distinguished teaching awards. I take my job and my classes very seriously. And I will not have them turned into a circus."

Dillard said after he threw the pie at Holmes, the psychology professor jumped on him and choked him until he surrendered his wallet.

"He started running away and I pursued him," Homes said. "I'm a cross country runner, so the student didn't have a chance to get away. I think the methodof restraint was appropriate for the situation."

As befits many a man who hit with lead instead of chocolate cream, Dillard refused to say who hired him.

"I think that's the ethics of the business," he said.

Enema Bandit Strikes Again

URBANA, Ill. [AP — May 8] — A masked man carrying a handgun and enema bag who victimized University of Illinois coeds in the mid-1960s and again in 1972 apparently is back in Champaign-Urbana.

The so-called Enema Bandit struck again over the weekend, police said administering enemas to coeds in two separate bizarre attacks.

Descriptions of the ski-masked bandit and his mode of operation match those of a man linked to 10 incidents between 1965 and 1972, police said.

David Gentille, retired Champaign police detective who worked on previous cases, said he was certain the most recent episodes were the work of the same man.

Police believe the same man was responsible for assaults in the university communities of Manhattan, Kan., Norman, Okla., and Los Angeles.

The bandit reportedly broke into a Champaign woman's apartment shortly after midnight Saturday and forced her to submit to an enema. Two hours later he entered an apartment in Urbana, tied up two female residents and two more when they returned home. He gave one of them two enemas, police said.

As in previous incidents, none of the coeds was sexually assaulted.

2 Woman Priests Put Rev on Trial

AKRON, Ohio [UPI] — The Rev. L. Peter Beebe goes on trial today at St. Paul Episcopal Church, charged with violating canon law by allowing two irregularly ordained women priests to celebrate Holy Communion.

Beebe has been charged with breaking his vows and defying Bishop John Burt of the Episcopal Diocese of Ohio by inviting the women priests to celebrate the Eucharist at Christ Church in Oberlin, Ohio.

The Rev. Alison Cheek and the Rev. Carter Heyward, two of 11 women who were ordained priests in Philadelphia, celebrated Communion Dec. 8. They returned on the eve of the trial once again to join in the blessing of the sacraments.

Beebe is the second Episcopal priest to undergo such a trial. The Rev. William Wendt, rector of the Church of St. Stephen and the Incarnation in Washington, D.C., stood trial last week for defying the church's stand against women priests. No decision has yet been announced in that case.

Five Episcopal priests will sit in judgement to determine the guilt or innoncence of the 29-year-old minister.

If the ecclesiastical court finds the Beebe guilty as charged, he faces censure, suspension, or deposition.

The defense will attempt to prove a discrepancy in the Gospel and in the interpretation of the man-made canon laws.

TV Viewer Dies While Laughing

KING'S LYNN, England [UPI] — Alexander Mitchell found a television show featuring a Scotsman fighting his bagpipes so hilarious he laughed until he died.

His wife Nessie said she would write and thank the creators of the comedy program "for making Alex's last minutes so happy."

Mr. Mitchell, a 50-year-old bricklayer, ate a heavy dinner before watching his favorite program, "The Goodies." After laughing nonstop for 25 minutes he collapsed and died.

Doctors said the strain of the laughter as he was digesting killed him.

"The Goodies" program featured a Scotsman fighting his bagpipes in a take-off on the marital art of Kung Fu.

Smokey Retires, Little Bear Next

WASHINGTON [UPI, May 1] — The government Friday will give a retirement party for an ailing Forest Service official who served faithfully for 25 years and is now leaving the rigors of Washington for his New Mexico home.

He is Smokey Bear, whose admonition that "Only You Can Prevent Forest Fires" became a national symbol of fire prevention and a public relations dream.

Spokesmen for the Forest Service said the tired, aging black bear will be replaced Friday by Little Smokey, a 4-year-old male who has been held ready for the succession since 1971.

Smokey and his mate Goldie, a 14-year-old black bear, will be taken to a "peaceful retirement" in Smokey's native New Mexico.

SMALL CLAIMS COURT

The Small Claims Court is a people's court designed to help you settle everyday financial disputes. Because small claims courts are informal and inexpensive, you are not required to have a lawyer in order to sue or be sued. You may speak for yourself and present your own evidence.

Small claims courts can be very useful in many situations. For example:

—Some one damages your property and refuses to pay for the repairs.

—You are owed money by an individual, a landlord, a tenant or business who refuses to pay.

—Your rent security deposit is not returned, or you made a deposit on an apartment which the landlord promises to refund if you decide not to move in, but he later refuses to honor the agreement.

You can only sue for money in a small claims court. In Massachusetts, the maximum amount of damages for which you can sue is $400.00. If the judge rules in your favor after the hearing, he will order that the money be paid to you. The fee you paid upon filing the original suit ($3.55) will be included in the payment.

Dent says 'Don't'

By P.J. PROKOP
Student Affairs Reporter

A graduated tuition for UMass students next year is the subject of controversy and confusion as the newly elected Student Senate President John O'Keefe offered a "proposal" for consideration.

Richard A. Dent, Director of Financial Aid said he knows of only one school in the midwest which tried the system four or five years ago, and it was a "resounding failure."

Dent added that the use of such a system, which determines a student's tuition rate on his or her family's ability to pay would be very cumbersome and can become a "real bone of contention" among families, who have to pay different rates for the same quality of education.

Warren Gulko, UMass Budget Director said he was concerned that such a system could be interpreted by many as an increase in tuition, which it would not be.

Gulko added that he felt a graduated tuition would not help anybody, and tuition is not the issue. "The Governor, chancellor, president and students all advocate low tuition, increased Financial Aid is the answer," he said. "We must be able to find a way to lower the cost, but no one has been able to do that," he added.

Asked why he wanted to implement or make a proposal for a graduated tuition system, O'Keefe said it was "just an idea" and he and members of other campus student groups would be learning about the system, where it has been used, and its degree of success. O'Keefe added that they would be studying the use of the system over the summer, and see if it would be feasible enough to consider making a proposal for it.

O'Keefe said that he had been informed that Rutgers University in N.J. was using such a system, but Doug Frank, of Rutgers Public Information Office denied such a claim saying Rutgers does not or has not used any such system, to his knowledge.

Dent also added the implementation of such a system would be difficult because every family's financial situation would have to be reviewed, and perhaps more people would rely on the Parent's Confidential Statement, or apply for Financial Aid.

Dent went on to say that it is a very complex system and he felt many people would react negatively to it.

Moving Out of Your Apartment; Do's & Don'ts

Progressive News Service

The Progressive News Service is an alternative news gathering service on campus which strives to present information about issues that concern the entire UMass community at large.

This article is the second of a three part series presented to inform people of the problems involved in moving out of apartments or houses in the Pioneer Valley.

DAMAGES

If you think there is a possibility that your landlord will unfairly charge you for damages after you leave, there are several ways you may avoid this kind of exploitation.

Tell him or her you are leaving, and you would like to arrange for him to inspect your apartment so he can see that there has been no damage to the premises. After you finish speaking to him, you should immediately write a note to him saying something like, "Just to confirm our conversation of (date), to inspect the premises to make the necessary determinations with regard to the return of my security deposit." Sign it, and mail it to him, keeping a copy for yourself. You might want to remind the landlord that he should have a list of all the damage that was present in your apartment when you moved in.

When the landlord comes, make sure he specifies what damage he intends to charge you for, and how much he plans to deduct from your security deposit for each item. If you are dissatisfied with the outcome of the inspection, you should make a tactical decision as to whether or not to tell him at that time. If you are satisfied, make sure to get the agreement in writing.

If your landlord does not want to return your entire security deposit within 30 days after you move out, or if you think that he is wrongfully keeping a part of it, you can sue

Arless A. Spielman, dean of the School of Food and Natural Resources, said, "We definitely need flexibility because none of us have the kind of vision to see ten to fifteen years from now what educational needs of the people of this state will be."

Kenneth G. Picha, dean of the School of Engineering, believes "institutional need" should be taken into account. He feels the School of Engineering already maintains a fair degree of flexibility. "Because engineers are applying science and math to contemporary problems, we make shifts in our faculty members. It's the field we're in that allows us to move from important issue to important issue," he said.

Both faculty and administrators realize that University efforts to consider long-range needs and maintain flexibility are necessarily related to the desired percentage of tenured faculty members in each department and school or college.

Stevenson W. Fletcher, faculty delegate to the Board of Trustees (BOT), transmitting the feelings he has received from the BOT, said: "The major concern of the BOT is with the "institutional need" aspect of the tenure system. The Board is hesitant about granting tenure (and thus tying down a position) in a department that will perhaps increase or decrease in the future in terms of enrollment."

According to Fletcher, the BOT strongly favors not having 100 per cent tenured departments. His own view is that a high percentage of tenure eliminates the flexibility of the allocation of resources.

Regarding tenure ratios, former Provost Gluckstern quoted the American Association of University Professors as saying that tenure ratios should not exceed two-thirds or 65 per cent. But Gluckstern feels that "even if a department is highly tenured, if somehow you can arrange for new ideas and new skills, then you'd be meeting the needs of students." He cited visiting professorships and the hiring of post-doctoral students as a way to inject new faces and ideas into a department.

Dean Spielman said he feels "we should strive to keep the percentage below 100 per cent in order to maintain flexibility."

Questions have been raised by faculty members as to what part "institutional need" has played, if any, in this year's tenure decisions. Out of the sixty-seven tenure recommendations that have gone from the departments to the provost, approximately forty-six positive recommendations have been sent up to the president's office. One recommendation has been deferred for two years, and two needed further information before a decision could be made at the provost and chancellor's level. Twelve negative recommendations were made at the level of the departments, provost and chancellor. The remaining six are expected to be acted on sometime in June.

Norman D. Aitken, chairman of the economics department, said he didn't think "institutional need" was a factor in the tenure decisions made in his department because of the "steady mushrooming of student enrollments."

Gluckstern said the concept of "institutional need" has taken on increasing importance in this year's tenure decisions.

But a highly placed source on this campus stated that not a single tenure recommendation emanating from this campus has been turned down on the basis of "institutional need."

Faculty members seem to understand the significance of trying to maintain flexibility and make plans based on projections of the long-range needs of the University. But emphasis, which was not there before, is now being placed on the implementation of these long-range needs as a criteria for tenure primarily because of the difficult budgetary problems facing both the Commonwealth and the nation.

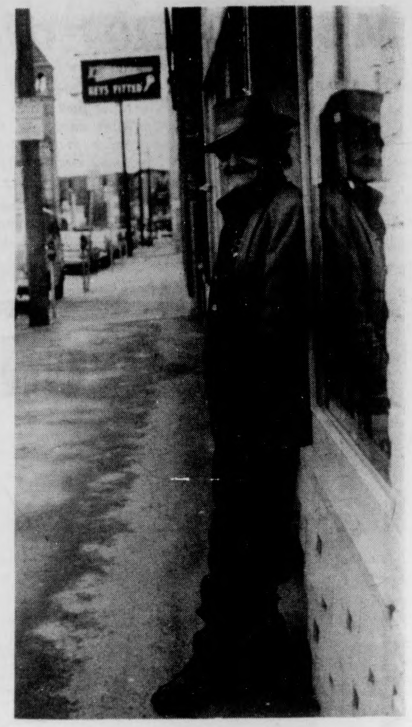
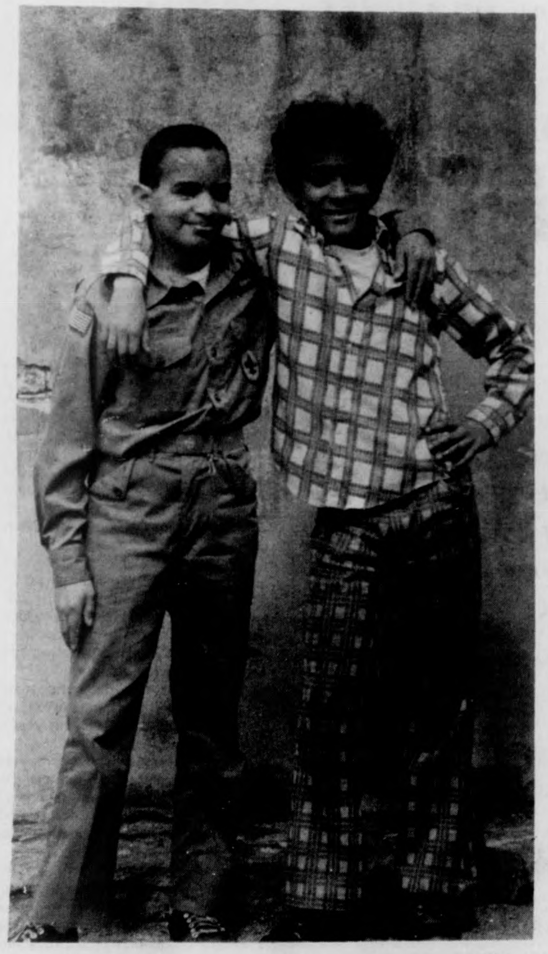
Lowell:

Portrait of a City



By Fran Glavin

Nineteenth century Lowell, Massachusetts has been described as the Utopia of the United States. Unfortunately, twentieth century Lowell is not a Utopia, but in spite of the difficult economic situation the people of Lowell remain strong.



Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Opinion and Editorial

And now for something Completely Different

In the spirit of Springtime, newness and growth, the Collegian is sponsoring an experimental week. We will be using different forms of layout, different styles of writing, different attitudes in delivery. This experimentation can not be any use to us if we do not have any feedback from you, our readers. This is the process for change. If you see something you appreciate, such as easily read headlines or larger pictures, and you want this sort of thing to continue, let us know. This goes for things you don't like as well, otherwise it may be repeated in the fall and you may have to live with it forever.

We tend to take this paper very seriously, much to the University's disbelief, however weeks like this are our way of reminding ourselves that we are students; students of life as well as journalism. We attempt to be an accurate reflection of our community. Sometimes we don't make it. This is our chance, and yours, to bring the community together. Perhaps it will be in mass laughter, but we've got to get it together.

Basically, this is our way to say we are trying. This is all a learning experience for us, just as it is for you. The mistakes we make are made honestly and we try not to repeat them. We are searching out an identity, a community identity. The Board of Editors supports the efforts and intent of this experimentation and urges all readers to respond in letters and in phone calls. It's spring and time for a little give and take. This is our part and we look forward to hearing yours.

All policy editorials represent the view of a majority of the board of editors.

ZAMIR ZEZ: Goodbye Alumnus

By ZAMIR NESTELBAUM

I've sworn up and down, to the shining stars up above and the burning fires down below, that I would never write a Goodbye Column. Too in-house, tacky and sentimental to be of real interest. Who cares. And some goodbyes aren't really goodbyes. Fred Weiss made his last December, only to come back from the dead last February, before he died again for good. But as that overweight bard once put it ... ''parting is such sweet sorrow.'' Sorrow, indeed.

There is a lot to say goodbye to as an undergraduate at UMass. It's been four long and short years and a good deal of development. There have been times of despair, times of lonliness, time of physical and psychological injury. Also times of happiness, satisfaction and good company. The University happens to be a tremendous place for an education, and not necessarily in the classroom. Four years were spent in a crazed and successful academic pursuit only to run into, finally, a brick wall. There's more of an education among the people here — those poor huddled masses yearning to breathe free.

''These were the best years of your lives'' it is written. And in many ways it is true. But if these be the best, I fear the not-so-best. What has transpired in four years? To say that one came and one left is too simplistic, but anything else would be a lie. It is enough only to say goodbye.

Goodbye Collegian. Like rotten food, you only get worse with age. And sometimes it really stinks ... But there are real good people among you and ... you know who you are.

Goodbye student politics and that kind of stuff. You've shown me that our Peace-Love generations has also its quotas of assholes — non-demoninational, of course. But the Union is the future. We have labored so that unborn students of next fall may enjoy the fruits of our efforts. (Reader can pause here to cry, or meditate for a moment.)

Goodbye Greenough and all you crazies. Truly a dorm away from home. Or is that home away from dorm. There's too many to name so I won't bother. But you know who you are, and I know who you are, and so does Jack Webb so ya better watch out.

Goodbye CASIAC and all you students who come there with dumb questions. ''Why can't they be like we were ... perfect in every way.'' Good luck KT, Karen Ruth et al.

Goodbye premed city — the giant sweepstakes. A few won, most lost. Hopefully the winners will be a credit to the race. And the losers have not really lost, but only time will bear that out.

Goodbye academia and all your tests, papers and crammings and sleep ridden classes and not-so-special projects. Goodbye grades. So long marks. Adios cumulative averages, and all other artificial comparisons.

Hello future ... which will undoubtedly have much of what I just said goodbye to. Hello future with all of your suspense surprise and decision. And of course death, but who's buying life insurance?

Special thanx to my parents who made it all possible, and Oscar who make it all probable. Also to Barry, and D.J., and Lynne and Jerry and Jane and Mark and Mike and Donny and Isaac and Bobby and ... Mimi and ... ad infinitum.

GOD SAVE ALL OF YOU

The question

What is your favorite aspect of Spring?

The answers

Tom Lovett, '76, Political Science Major, off campus resident. ''The Boston Red Sox!''

Kris Jackson, '75, Cartooning major, off campus resident. ''Sex and violence!''

Dolores Harris, '77, Clinical Psych major, resident. The weather. It's, nice to get away from books this time of year, though you really shouldn't.''

Don McGilvray, '75, BFA major, off campus resident. ''Mushrooms. They're also my favorite part of Summer, Winter, and ah, what's the other one?''

Gail Callanan, '78, JS English major, Resident of Cance. ''Nature, the trees and the freshness in the air. Everything seems to come alive.''

Maria Magalhas, '77, nursing major, resident of MacNamara. ''Blossoming flowers. I love the countryside. It's nice to see the greenness after such a bleak, long winter.''

Ben Page, Todd Kosarick, Bill Williams, Residents of Amherst, students at Amherst Jr. High. ''Kissing girls in the park.''

Ultimate rip off

''Super Bash at Last,'' It's Guaranteed!'' Guaranteed to RIP YOU OFF! ''All the Beer and Wine you Can Drink!'' May 9th! And all this for $2! Sound like a good deal??? It looks good on paper, but ultimately, never came off.

The ''3 in 1 Boogie'' was supposedly to refer to four bands [Actual Proof, Billy Colwell, Dynamic Sex Machine, and Over Night Sensation], ''A New York Comedian,'' and a ''Professional D.J. with Disco,'' performing in 3 locations, rotating at various times, and eventually playing at all the places. In reality, only the three bands played without rotating. No D.J., no Comedian and was there something about a ''Professional Light and Sound Show???'' No one was told and it wasn't until 12:00 that the situation was revealed. At 12:30, money was still being taken, even after there was no more beer left [at Hamden D.C.].

The questions are, ''Where did all the money go,'' Why weren't people told,'' or was this planned from the start — to get people so loaded that they wouldn't know what was coming off???

Whoever was responsible for this total chaotic event, is also responsible to all the people who attended and expected to see the pre-advertised entertainment. We, like others, were taken in by this and we think it should be known that some person[s] made out in this deal, at the expense of all those who attended the ''Super Bash'' — the ultimate in rip-offs!

Personality and good pen(person)ship

Well ... we made it! For three years we have pored through the Collegian's Letters to the Editor composed by a multitude of disgruntled UMies. We have read expressions of discontent on assorted topics — from Amherst Towing to Zamir Nestlebaum's editorials.

Many legitimate gripes have been promulgated throughout the year in this section of our school newspaper. It was decided at our most recent meeting that the time has come for us to take a stand.

During our educational and social experiences here at UMass we have been aware of a serious and malicious prevalence of linguistic chauvanism. *Our members have been somewhat appeased recently by the metamorphisis of such words as 'chairman' [now chair*person], 'spokesman' [now spokesperson], 'salesman' [now salesperson] etc.

Ostensibly, linguistic chauvanism still abounds! Our rage increases as we continually encounter such words as 'menstruation,' 'menopause' and 'mentality' [to name but a few]. The derivations of these words are immaterial. The cessation of such blatant sexism is imperative. We propose that such words be replaced by 'womenstruation', 'womenopause' [after all men have no direct affiliation with either of these] and persontality. The list of necessary modifications appears endless.

We voted to draft letters to encourage specific individuals to liberate their last names. We have suggested that the 'Shermans' become the 'Sherpersons', the 'Bermans' become the 'Berpersons', the 'Zimmermans' become the 'Zimmerpersons', etc.

*Some insist that this is all merely a matter of semantics. To these people we reiterate — SEPER-*SONT*ICS!*

Repetitive response

Let me preface my remarks by saying that I did not vote for Michael Dukakis in last year's primary or general election though I am a Democrat. I must bring out though, the immature behavior of a number of students at last Monday night's meeting for those who did not attend. For the first time since I came to school here I was sorry to be associated with UMass. The majority of questions asked were irrelevant or poorly thought out; student behavior was obnoxious affording Dukakis less opportunity to get his points across than he justly deserved. It is my hope that the next time a controversial person comes to speak at UMass the students will act with some intelligence and maturity and allow the person their right to free speech, a right often violated last Monday night. Thank you.

More Echoes From The Reading Public

Fear of phasing

It has recently come to the attention of the Sunday News Collective that day care facilities at the University ~~are being~~ quietly phased out. Two centers, New World Day and Infant Day, with thirty-three children, are being closed as of June 1 for a lack of space. As far back as October of 1974 Doctor Gage promised adequate space for these centers, but to date the only thing the staffs of these centers have received is words. At the same time the one office on campus which coordinates day care is being shut down at the end of the present fiscal year. Adequately funded day care is essential for people who wish to continue their education and also have children to care for. Day care centers provide education for children, places where people can get together and discuss the issues confronting students with children, and jobs for those interested in child care work. The Day Care Task Force has sent an open letter to Chancellor Bromery and James de Shields, Affirmative Action Officer, in which the following demands are listed:

1. That the university provide space for the two Third World Day Care Centers — New World and Infant Day — on the first floor of Hills North and assume costs of appropriate renovation.

2. That there be paid co-ordinator and staff in charge of University Day Care operations and that this administrative staff be independent and report directly to Chancellor Bromery.

3. That there be more monies for part-time staff and for work study students to work in day care.

4. That the Registrar's Office and Personnel Office should collect and provide data on the number of student-and staff-related children of day care age in the University Community.

If you support these demands we urge you to call or write Chancellor Bromery as soon as possible and voice your support.

The following groups have already endorsed these demands:

University Women's Caucus
Socialist-Feminist Collective Commuter Assembly
Veteran's Coalition
Pioneer Valley Tenants Union
Sunday News Collective Ganienkeh Support Collective — U.C.C.A.
Non-traditional Student Assembly

You are what you eat

Last Friday night the dining commons served the most disgusting meal I have ever experienced. The main course was labeled "baked fish" but it tasted more like "baked shit". I took one bite of the fish and felt so sick I couldn't eat any more. I offered the remaining fish to a dog who walked by the table but he knew better and just walked away.

Seconds was baked lasagna. I couldn't figure out what it was made of but it tasted like soap. After one bite of that I just pushed it aside. All in all my supper for Friday consisted of two bites of food and two glasses of milk. I must admit, the milk wasn't bad...

Come next semester, I myself am going off the meal ticket even if I have to pay the proposed $40 fee. Anyone who has the chance I would advise to do the same.

I hope Nan Slattery wins her case against the mandatory dining commons law because no student should be forced to endure such torture. If the saying "You are what you eat" was true, students eating at the dining commons would gradually be turning into garbage.

Russian sailors aboard destroyer Boykiy get glimpse of Boston. Ship arrived yesterday to celebrate V-E Day.

Dentist, Wife Plan to Sail Through Marriage

DEKALB, Ill. [UPI] — Leo Krusack, a dentist, used to go through girlfriends "like crazy" because they were all turned off by his lifelong dream. When he found one who shared his enthusiasm, he married her.

As part of the marriage contract, Krusack says only half kidding, his wife Sue agreed to go on a three-year round the world trip in a 30-foot sailboat. The couple will begin the voyage this November — as soon as they finish rebuilding the boat.

Krusack, 29, who has been sailing for 13 years, plans to give up temporarily his dental practice for the job, and Sue, 26, will quit her secretarial job. They figure they'll spend a total of $20,000 on the boat and equipment and take about $9,000 with them.

"This boat is costing me twice as much as I thought it would, so we may have to stop and work in Australia if we run short of money," Krusack says. "I figure we're both smart people and we'll get a job somewhere."

Since marrying two years ago, the Krusacks have spent weekends preparing their boat for the journey. They bought an old steel structure with plans to refinish it, but it was in such bad shape they rebuilt it almost entirely.

"This is just kind of my life dream," Krusack said. "I used to go through girlfriends like crazy when I told them about it. Sue's a real hero. She signed up."

"She was enthusiastic from the beginning or the marriage would never have taken place." The Krusacks will begin their trip Nov. 1 to avoid the hurricane season. They'll start down the Illinois River to the Mississippi and then on to Mexico, Panama, the Galapagos Islands, and 1,000 miles southwest to Pitcairn Island.

"Then we'll probably spend the next 1-½ years going through the South Pacific, then Indonesia and India and we'll probably go around the southern tip of Africa, he said.

Krusack says his sailing has been mostly limited to Lake Michigan and "everything beyond the continental United States is an unknow, but I've read extensively and I think we'll be prepared for it."

The Krusacks do not plan to have a radio transmitter, partly because of cost and partly because such equipment easily corrodes in salt water.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by stella wilder

TUESDAY, MAY 13 — Born today, you are adventuresome by nature, as well as highly romantic. Inclined always to place the best light on things, there are no situations or circumstances that can actually depress you to the point of forcing you out of action. You are never without the strength of mind and character, and the optimism of spirit it takes to transform adversity into advantage. You enjoy the challenge of making order from chaos -- and, if you can perform that small miracle in the presence of an audience, you enjoy it even more.

You will have to keep under control that part of your nature which would willingly throw over everything that is stable in your life for the excitement and danger you see in so many activities denied you in the course of a "normal" life. For the most part, you should be aided in resisting the pull of danger by your natural sentiments from which arise very close family ties -- ties which you would not forfeit under any circumstances.

You have a desire for success -- and a genuine ambition for fame. You should attain the object of your desire without much trouble, for you are sensible, a good worker, and gifted with a certain charm that makes people want to advance you along the road to success. Where fame is concerned, however, the story may be quite different, for you may well lack the originality and the infinite determination required.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Wednesday, May 14

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Depend upon another to do your work for you and you may find nothing accomplished by day's end. Don't trust your reputation to any but you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Being now to prepare for the upcoming weekend. There is nothing to keep you from moving ahead on the employment scene during afternoon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Consider the angle from which you are viewing another's work' otherwise, you may well misjudge both his efforts and his results.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — When and if a friend calls for aid today, answer without delay. Now is an excellent time to demonstrate your loyalty and dependability.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Keep an important appointment early in the day. Otherwise, you may let an opportunity for gain and a change of pace escape you completely.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Engage in social activities at evening. During the day, however, keep strictly to business. This may be a good time to launch another project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Benefit from another's experience. There is nothing to be gained by going through unnecessary disappointment and discouragement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make a genuine effort to solve personal difficulties by day's end. You can be of great help to another simply by being present.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — There is no such thing as an excess of good. Accept benefits when and as they occur -- and don't be so foolish as to look a gift horse in the mouth.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Except for early morning hours, this should be a day that tries your mettle. Think quickly -- and act immediately upon your decision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Solve problems with the young early in the day. Make yourself useful about the house -- and on the employment scene. Listen to others in afternoon and evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care of personal responsibilities during morning hours. Afternoon and evening should be devoted to the needs of those less fortunate than yourself.

Native Guest Pays $10,000 Fee

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Native guest, whose owner wiil have to pay a supplementary entry fee of $10,000 for the Preakness, worked through six furlongs Monday at Pimlico and left trainer Bobby Frankel satisfied the money would be well spent.

The colt owned by W.A. Levin's Goldmill Farms turned the first quarter mile in 23 3-5 seconds, three furlongs in 35 1-5 seconds and the half mile in 47 1-5.

With former national riding champion Sandy Hawley in the saddle for the workout, Native Guest wound up his three quarter mile gallop in 1:12.

Before jumping in a car to catch a plane with Hawley back to California, Frankel described the Colt's last serious workout before the May 17 Preakness as entirely satisfactory. "That's just what I wanted," Frankel said.

Native guest never raced as a 2-year-old and was neither a derby entry nor an original nominee for the Preakness.

But his four straight wins as a 3-year-old, including the Debonair and the El Dorado handicap at Hollywood Park, have persuaded Levin to pay the extra fee required of Preakness entries not nominated by the Feb. 15 closing date.

In the meantime, the Preakness field appeared to have leveled off at an even 10. Trainer Johnny Campo arrived Monday from New York with Media, the fifth place finisher in the derby, and Just the Time, who will enter the race paired with Media.

Campo said he would put Jose Velasquez on Media for the Preakness instead of Derby jockey Jean Cruguet. Ron Turcotte, the jockey who guided Secretariat to his triple crown in 1973, will ride Just The Time.

Lou Rondinello, the trainer of Darby Dan Farms' Prince Thou Art, told Pimlico officials from Belmont Park that he was "leaning" toward running his sixth place derby finisher in the Preakness and would decide after a 3-or 4-furlong workout Thursday.

With those three horses counted, the field for the "run for the black eyed susans" now looks like this (tentative odds following each horse were set Monday by Pimlico oddsmaker Earl Hart) Foolish Pleasure 6-5; Avatar 4-1; Diabolo 6-1; Singh 8-1; Master Derby 8-1; Prince Thou Art 12-1; Native Guest 15-1; Bold Chapeau 20-1; and Media and Just The Time, paired at 20-1.

Singh, a son of Bold Ruler who missed the derby because of an injury, rated equal odds with Master Derby, the fourth place derby finisher, on the strength of his strong showing in the Preakness prep Saturday.

Celts To Drink Away Sorrows

By GIL PETERS
UPI Sports Writer

BOSTON [upi[— The Boston Celtics spent Monday divvying up money and trying to convince themselves they were happy to be out of work.

The defending National Basketball Association champions, knocked out of the playoffs Sunday by the Washington Bullets, ambled into the team office at Boston Garden with talk of fishing, driving home and drinking beer.

"What can I say about losing?" asked John Havlicek as he rounded up a couple of teammates for a weekend fishing trip to Ontario. "Our shooting wasn't good and our execution wasn't either. We were being indecisive about things."

Assistant General Manager Jeff Cohen provided some statistics that bore out Havlicek. The Celtics, who had shot at a .458 percentage all season ("our best season ever") connected at a .403 rate in losing to the Bullets. "Yet we averaged more than 100 shots a game against the Bullets, compared to 95 a game during the season. The ball just wasn't going in the hole," he said.

Dave Cowens, who had shooting problems all series. along with Havlicek and Jo Jo White, wasn't interested in statistics on Monday. The Boston center, wearing blue pants, blue shirt and dark sunglasses which accented the red crop of hair atop his 6-9 frame, was looking for drinking buddies.

"Let's go get some beer," he said to Don Nelson. "I'm starving, too. Let's go get some food and beer." Cowens and Nelson then talked about joining Havlicek on the fishing safari.

White, sitting apart from the others and looking lost in somber thoughts beneath a white cabbie's hat, was more interested in holding a team meeting to divide the money and then going home. He killed time waiting for the remaining players to arrive by playing a pinball machine in the Boston Garden Arcade with reserve forward Phil Hankinson.

Paul Silas, the most consistent Celtic in the six-game Eastern Conference finals, talked of buying a case of beer and heading for the swimming pool at his suburban Boston home.

But how about the series that was just lost, Silas was asked: Now that you've had a night's sleep, do you think the Celtics played as well as they could have?

"No," he said, spooning out each word, "We did not play as well as we could have. We didn't, mainly, because we applied a lot of pressure on ourselves that wasn't necessarily there and we wound up having to make 'must' shots. We weren't loose and fluid as we have been in the past.

UMass Juggling Act? No, Was Tennis Team

By PETER NALAK

A four week juggling act bounced this year's UMass netmen to a 5-4 record and second place in the Yankee Conference.

Coach Kosakowski tossed around 12 different doubles teams and 13 separate players to fill the three doubles and six singles spots available.

"I have never had this many different combinations," Kosakowski said.

The netmen's season started with three straight 4-5 losses, to Boston University, Amherst and Tufts College.

Some line-up changes produced a 7-2 triumph against the Rhode Island Rams and a 6-3 tally over New Hampshire.

Vermont, the defending Yankee Conference champions, squeaked by UMass 5-4 in a mid-season dual match.

The netmen completed their regular season by winning four out of their last five matches and provided the only threat against Vermont supremacy at the conference championships.

At the conference tournament UMass kept their team tally close to Vermont's until the second day of competition. On day two, all three Minuteman doubles lost semifinal matches and Vermont clinched the title.

Mystery players were served up all season by UMass.

Rob Schpeiser, last year's number one netman, played only two days of the spring season — the Yankee Conference tournament. He won three matches to take the first singles title but did not play the season's last dual match or the New England championships.

At mid-season Art Cloutier fought his way up from the ranks to start at sixth singles. Cloutier dropped his first match to M.I.T., but then won six straight to capture the Yankee Conference sixth singles title and compile a 6-2 record.

Four solid performers made up the back bone of the 1975 squad.

Captain Chris Post, who played first and second singles, was the season's most valuable player, Coach Kosakowski said. Post lost only two regular season matches, both to the same Vermont opponent, en route to a 10-4 record.

Freshman Billy Karol did not lose a first or third singles match until a mid-season matchup against M.I.T. Karol fought through seven three set struggles, finishing 11-4 for the season.

Barnaby Kalan went undefeated for the regular season, capturing the Yankee Conference fourth singles title and ending up 13-2 overall.

Marc Ouellet put in an 8-4 performance at fourth and fifth singles, winning six straight regular season matches.

Kevin Garrahan, Dave Abramoff and John Beals also played singles for the netmen, being shuffled into various positions when needed.

Weak doubles hurt UMass all year as only two teams posted winning records.

Chris Post and Marc Ouellet, consistent second doubles starters, went 5-4 for the regular season. The third doubles duo of Abramoff and Kalan tallied a 5-3 record, staying undefeated in the Yankee Conference until the championships.

Billy Karol played doubles with four different partners during the year. His best effort was with Rob Schpeiser, a quick 1-1 record in the conference tournament.

Other netmen switched in and out of the doubles included: Kevin Garrahan, Tom Doyle, Art Cloutier, Arnold Newberger, Chris Chingros and Tom Rawinski.

Coach Kosakowski was he was pleased with the teams performance, especially since this season's squad was not as strong as in past years.

"A lot was more guts than talent. I think it was a full team effort," he said.

The netmen's schedule changes seasons next September, from spring to fall competition. Due to the change, there will be two full 1975 tennis seasons and possibly two different conference champions in one year.

Netman Mark Ouellet leans to and fro in an attempt to pick off ball. The netmen finish the season 5-4, including many ups and downs in search of an effective doubles team.

The intramural program will finish up yet another successful year this week, with interest as high as it has ever been.

This Wednesday night at 5:15 on field one across from Boyden Gym, a new softball championship team will be crowned. Presently, there are eight teams still competing for the Campus Champ Title in the quarterfinal round. The match-ups for this round are Squif vs. Beta Kappa Phi, Dodo's vs. the McNamara Magicians, the Soso's vs. the Macaques, and the Ballbusters vs. either Sigma Phi Epsilon or Webster Gold.

Beta Kappa Phi is no stranger in intramural softball play-off action. Last year, they made it all the way to the finals, only to lose to the Thatcher Redwoods 3-0. This season though, the Redwoods are long gone, and BKP is doing the shutting-out. Led by Tom Lannon's homer, the Frat-men exploded for six first inning runs which was more than enough, as they went on to defeat the Maroons 6-zip.

Both the Ballbusters and Squif used fifth inning tallies to win their respective games against the Mongols and the Ants, to advance to the quarter-finals round. The 'busters allowed the Mongols to tie up the game in the bottom of the fourth by scoring five times (making the score 7-all), before they came back with four runs in the top of the fifth and make it 11-7, the final score. Squif won their game with the Ants by picking up a pair of runs in their half of the fifth, to put them ahead 5-1. They held off the Ants last ditch effort, and won 5-3.

The Ballbusters don't know who they're playing next because the Sigma Phi Epsilon-Webster Gold game is being played over due to a protest, upheld by the IM office. (A Gold runner supposedly hadn't tagged up from second base, after a spectacular catch was made of a fly ball into center field. The runner scored, but was called out for not tagging-up — though the ump actually didn't know if he had tagged up or not — because he too was watching the catch.) The winner of the re-match will advance on; the loser will cry foul play.

Meanwhile, the McNamara Magicians, sparked by the two-hit pitching of Pete DiSalvatore, collected their second playoff rout, this time eliminating the Toads, 7-0. After allowing a leadoff double, followed by a single, Pete stopped the Toads cold, and the next fifteen men went down in order (he was also helped by some fantastic defensive plays: Ron Bruno, the M's first baseman, stopped a liner from going into right field, and beat the runner to first base).

Line drives: Coincidently, in each of these pre-quarter-final matchups, the home team (the team up last, decided by coin toss) lost with the exception of BKP ... I almost forgot: the Dodo's made it to the quarters by dumping the Bums 5-1, while the Soso's (no relation) cut down the Pines 6-3 ... the umps for the championship game will probably be the best the IM office has ... more on the umps later ...

Finish Up Vs. Chiefs

By LAURIE WHITING

The UMass Women's softball team will play their last game of the season today at home against Springfield College.

This will be the UMass women's second game against Springfield this season. The first game, at Springfield, was a loss played almost entirely in the rain and poor conditions.

Coming fresh off a win against Worcester State, the UMass team should be able to give Springfield a better game this time around.

The UMass players had their game together against Worcester with stronger hitting and better fielding than they'd shown earlier this season.

Springfield will be no easy match however, as pitcher Diane Schumacher won't give UMass an easy day at the plate, and Springfield hitting will challenge UMass' field.

The game starts at 3:00 on the playing field behind N.O.P.E. gym.

IM Scoops

Between the raindrops, the playoffs continued Monday. Beta Kappa Phi eliminated Squif 4-zip; Dodo's tripped the Magicians 4-2; Soso's upset (and I do mean upset) the Marques 5-4; and last but not least, the Ball busters crayoned (that's an original) the Gold from Webster 6-5. The winners advance to the semi-final play on Tuesday, with the finals on Wed.

Led by Patco (17 pts.), Langlois and Kenney (10 pts. each) the UMass Bongers (Campus Champs in intramural basketball this year) completely dominated an antramural game with U.N.H.'s Salt and Pepper (their campus champs), 59-42.

Batmen Need Respect

By BOB HIGGINS

The UMass baseball team will be attempting to salvage some semblance of respectability when they travel to Dartmouth today for a 1:00 doubleheader with the Big Green.

The Minutemen are now 9-16 on the season, which is identical to last year's final record. With just four games remaining (today's and a doubleheader against UConn on Saturday), Coach Dick Bergquist's squad would at least like to win three of those to show some improvement over last season, though this goal may be unrealistic.

John McManus, 1-2 on the season but coming off a couple of good outings, will start game one for the Minutemen. Bergquist has yet to decide whether Craig Allegrezza or Jeff Reardon will pitch the second.

Three weeks ago, Dartmouth came to Amherst and swept a doubleheader from the Minutemen, 5-1 and 7-4. The losses were costly for UMass as centerfielder Pete Backstrom and catcher Jim Black each pulled hamstring muscles and were out for extended periods of time. Both are back in the lineup now, though neither is at full speed.

Other Minutemen are hobbled by injuries which have hampered the team all season long. First baseman John Seed is still hurting from a groin pull and is doubtful for tomorrow. He may be replaced by co-captain John Healy, who is unable to catch because of shoulder problems which have limited his playing time all season.

The Minutemen are likely to face Dartmouth's ace pitcher, Jim Beattie. UMass managed just three hits off Beattie in the first game of the April 23 doubleheader, and scored only as result of Beattie's three walks in the first inning.

Bergquist is not contemplating any late-season experimental lineup changes. The only switch he has made is moving third baseman Jerry Mondalto to shortstop and Jim Cullen from short to third. Mondalto has made only one error all season, and Bergquist figures he will get more grounders at short. "Jerry's been one of our few pleasant spots this season," said Bergquist.

FOUL TIPS ... The latest statistics show Craig Allegrezza leading the squad in batting (.363), but he appeared in just 15 games. Of the regulars, Seed (.337), Backstrom (.333), and Black (.300) are the leaders ... Allegrezza also leads the pitchers with a 2.41 ERA and a 4-3 record ... The team ERA, which was 5.24 last season, is now 3.90 ... The squad has stolen 29 bases in 35 attempts. Mondalto is seven for seven in steals. The Minutemen have turned in 24 double plays to their opponents' 15.

Figure it our Dept. Pitcher Craig Allegrezza (22 below) leads the Minutemen in batting; .363. Of the regulars, John Seed (15 below) leads the team with .337. The duo are shown here in action against Maine. Notice the men on base, as the Minutemen are currently 9-16. What does it mean? Above, Unindentified Sliding Object, known to be a Minuteman, makes it safely to second.

Flyers derail Islanders, 4-1

UPI Telephoto

Flyer's Gary Dornhoefer slides into New York Islanders' goalie Glenn Resch after his shot on the goal was stopped in the first period at the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The Philadelphia Flyers, spurred by Rick MacLeish's hat trick and a surprise personal appearance by singer Kate Smith, defeated the New York Islanders 4-1 Tuesday night to enter the National Hockey League Stanley Cup finals against the Buffalo Sabres.

Miss Smith had hardly finished singing "God Bless America" when Gary Dornhoefer scored to start the destruction of the "Cinderella" dreams of the comeback Islanders. The Islanders had come from an 0-3 deficit to win three straight games to tie the best-of-seven semi-final round against the Flyers, the defending Stanley Cup champions.

The Islanders had also dropped the first three games of their quarterfinal series to Pittsburgh before rallying for four straight victories.

Dornhoeffer's goal, the first of three Flyer tallies in the opening period, came after Jim Watson stole the puck at center ice. Watson passed off to Dornhoeffer who had a semi-break away 40-foot slap shot from the right circle that went past Islander goalie Glen Resch.

MacLeish scored on a power play at 2:27 of the first period. Bill Barber shot one on Resch from about 55-feet out and it deflected off MacLeish's skate to make it 2-1. It was the Flyers' first power play goal in the last 19 attempts in the playoffs.

The Islanders narrowed the margin in the same period on a power play goal by Jude Drouin at 5:02. That goal came 11 seconds after the Flyers were short two men due to penalties to Jim Watson and Andre DuPont.

MacLeish scored his second goal of the game about two minutes later on another power play when he skated cross ice to the left of Resch and pushed it past him.

MacLeish got his hat trick in the third period when with only 1:08 to play when he sent one into the Islanders open net from the blue line. It was his 10th goal of the playoffs.

The Flyers management last year started substituting Miss Smith's recordings for the national anthem and it proved to be lucky to the Flyers. Her last personal appearance here was in the sixth game of the Stanley Cup final when the Flyers upset the Boston Bruins to capture the title.

Reardon tosses two-hitter

Batsmen give and take with Ivy

By BOB HIGGINS

Sophomore Jeff Reardon's two-hitter in game two gave the UMass baseball team a split with Dartmouth College in yesterday's doubleheader at Hanover.

Dartmouth took the first game, 6-4, capitalizing on the wildness of UMass starter John McManus to score four runs in the third inning. But Reardon (4-4, 3.63 ERA), quashed any Big Green hopes of sweeping the doubleheader as the Minutemen took the second, 4-1.

The Dalton native breezed through the first five innings of the nightcap, facing just fifteen batters (one Big Greenie walked in the first but was subsequently thrown out stealing). Overall, Reardon struck out ten and walked just two in the seven-inning game.

Dartmouth picked up both "hits" and their only run in the sixth. After hitting catcher Todd Morris, Reardon set down the next two batters. Mark Ditmar then laid down a bunt that third baseman Jim Cullen booted. It was scored as a hit (by the home scorer), but it seemed pretty certain that had Cullen fielded it cleanly, he would have had Ditmar.

The scorer was taken off the hook on the next play, however, when Steve Mele (son of Sam, former major league player and manager) smashed a grounder to third. It went through Cullen, but it was hit so hard that it was scored a hit as well. So Dartmouth had their run, and Reardon lost his no-hit bid.

Cullen redeemed himself offensively, however, as he and Mark Fontaine each had two hits in game two off Dartmouth pitcher Tom Snickenberger (if the name's familiar, it's because he was the quarterback in football). Cullen and Jerry Mondalto each had two RBI's as the Minutemen scored single runs in four different innings.

In game one, UMass once again watched an early lead disappear, came back to tie it up, but then blew it with a little help from its "friends".

They jumped on Dartmouth starter Dave Demarco in the first when Steve Wright singled, John Healy forced him, John Seed singled, and Mondalto walked to load the bases. Designated hitter Craig Allegrezza lifted a fly down the right field line, Healy tagged at third and scored, and when the throw to home went into the dugout, Seed scored to make it 2-0.

The Big Green pulled ahead in the third when McManus, who had been pitching well in his last few appearances, found himself in a two-out, bases loaded jam as a result of a walk and two singles. He then proceeded to walk Greg Cronin, hit John McKeon in the foot, and walked two more before Bergquist replaced him with Allegrezza.

Allegrezza got out of the jam, but it was obvious that he wasn't throwing well. The arm problems which plagued him last season have returned, although the seriousness is unknown yet. Rich Kelly pitched the final three innings for UMass.

The Minutemen tied it up in the fourth when Demarco walked four consecutive batters and Seed hit a sacrifice fly off reliever Carl Hanson.

In the fifth, however, Dartmouth picked up their final two runs off Kelly, due, in large measure, to two atrocious calls by umpire Fred Bellissimo. First, he was way out of position to call a pick off play at third, which had Cronin by a few feet. On the very next play, he didn't run out to left when Fontaine made a sparkling diving grab of a Morris liner, but lost it as he rolled over. Two runs scored on the play, and Hanson breezed the rest of the way for the Big Green. Hanson got the win while Kelly, now 1-3, took the loss.

Tom Nigro pitched a two-hitter and upped his record to 5-0 as the JV baseball squad finished their season by splitting with the Dartmouth JV's. The Minutemen finished the season with a record of 14-4.

Nigro, a freshman, pitched a no-hitter through five innings of game one, which UMass won, 1-0. In game two, however, some extremely poor defense caused the JV's to collapse, 10-2.

UMass managed just one hit of their own in game one, but, in the true spirit of JV baseball, an incredibly dumb play gave the Minutemen their run.

In the fourth, Mark Wyner led off by reaching on an error, and Bill Hend followed with a single. Bevel Cummings then hit into a double play. When the DP was completed, the Dartmouth first baseman, thinking there were three outs, flipped the ball to the umpire. Wyner, heads up all the way, raced around to score and that was the ballgame.

Tom Ferris started game two for UMass, but ran into a few problems, due in part to the steady drizzle. Bob Black relieved him in the fifth, and Chip Warren followed in the sixth.

"We were just plain blown out," said coach Jeff McKay after the game. "We played some really poor defense," he added, a logical conclusion since his squad made six errors.

Nigro, sure to see some varsity action next season, struck out eight and walked just two.

FOUL TIPS ... Bush - play - of - the - day award goes to Dartmouth's Cronin, who, after striking out with two men on in the sixth inning of game two, almost killed a few teammates when he fired his bat into the dugout ... Fontaine went four for five on the day after replacing Healy in left in the first inning of game one ... Healy, UMass' answer to Carlton Fisk, pulled a hamstring and was unable to play (again) ... The Minutemen, now 10-17 on the year, will close the season with a doubleheader at UConn on Saturday. Dartmouth's record is now 17-15 ... Wright batted leadoff in both games, and did the job by getting on base four times.

M or F: An athletic dilemma

As this university and the state enter the last half of this decade, the problem uppermost in the minds of all of us concerns money and where it's going to come from. At this point it should be apparent that sources of funds are drying up faster than puddles dry in the Sahara sun.

The Athletic Department at UMass will enter a new era next semester, when it will have to face up to a number of nagging questions. The major one is how the women's and men's athletic programs will be equalized financially without hurting the athletic setup as a whole.

The Federal Government's Title IX, states that men and women should receive equal funds for intercollegiate sports, but, if that happens here, the entire area of athletics could be dealt a mortal blow.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, varsity and junior varsity sports teams spent $245, 200 of the athletic Trust Fund. When you divide that among men's and women's teams, the result is staggering.

Of the total trust fund allocation, an incredible 90.8 per cent or $222,800 went to men, while only 9.2 per cent or $22,400 went to women. It would take only the most sexist individual to realize that something must be done to correct the imbalance, but the key question is how much equalization can be carried out without damaging existing programs.

The most radical individuals, who want a 50-50 across the board setup, are being totally unrealistic. First of all, keep in mind that a $100,000 a year while elephant exists on this campus called Alumni Stadium which like a threatening raincloud mars the skyline of this campus. Unless the debt on the stadium could be dispensed with by other sources, which is unlikely in these times, it would be absurd to have the football budget cut to a significant extent. Up to now, it has been the major tenant of the stadium.

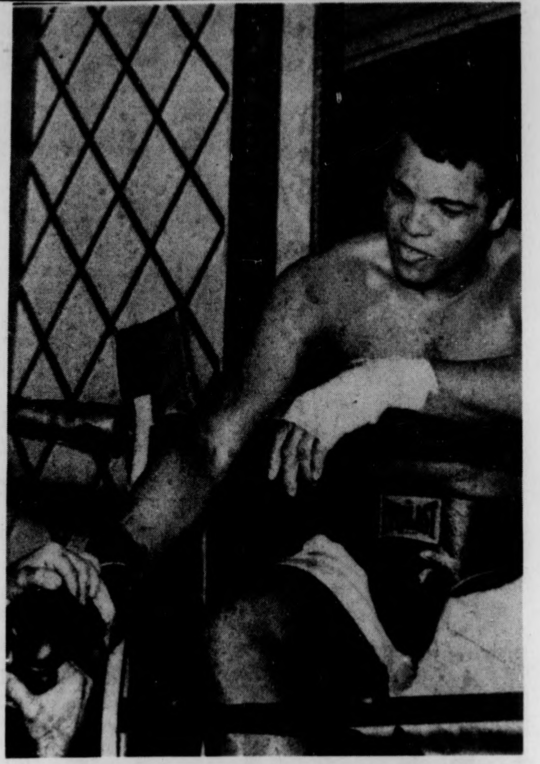
The second major spender after football ($82,700) is hockey, and to ask Coach Jack Canniff to accept a cut when he doesn't even have a rink of his own would be preposterous. So no matter how you cut it, any cuts in men's sports will have to be the wholesale cuts of entire programs. That is the only way the imbalance between men's and women's sports will be narrowed, since the Athletic Department would be insane to expect that new sources of funds would materialize in the near future, whereby men's programs could remain stable and women's programs could be strengthened financially, at one and the same time.

And if one expects that money could be made from attendance, remember that this campus is situated in the Berkshire foothills, not exactly the greatest source of ticket buyers in the United States.

So for the present time the UMass Athletic Department will have to figure out how you can equalize men's and women's programs without cutting existing sports. Since that's an impossibility, you could rightly say that Frank McInerney and company have the unenviable task ahead of them of making everybody happy.

Ali ready for Lyle

UPI Telephoto



LAS VEGAS (AP) — Heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali worked out Tuesday within a stone's throw of the slot machines and gaming tables at a resort hotel and said he had that old feeling.

The champion's feeling is for prophesy, not for gambling.

"I'll knock him out in the eighth round," said Ali of Ron Lyle, whom he will fight here Friday night. "I just got a feeling like I used to get. In round eight I'm going to go all out."

Ali has not made a round prediction in several years but noted "out of 18 predictions I have picked 13 right on the round."

There is no betting line on the outcome of the fight at present, but there is wagering on whether Ali will knock out the ex-convict from Denver.

Ali also has changed training methods for this fight. Instead of going to his camp in the Pennsylvania woods as he has for his last several bouts, this time he trained in Miami Beach and in Las Vegas.

"I had too many helpers," he said of the crowds that surrounded him at his Deer Lake, Pa., camp. "I'm gonna have to fire half of them. There are too many people bothering me, too many hangers on."

Challenger Ron Lyle (above) tapes his fist during training session for Friday night's nationally televised fight with heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali (right). The title bout will begin at 7:30 at the Convention Center in Las Vegas.

Sports notices

There will be an open track meet for women, today at 5:00 p.m. at the UMass track, situated in the Northwest corner of campus. Novice and experienced division races will be held in each event. Purpose of the meet is to encourage women to give track a try and to form a nucleus for next year's track and cross country programs for women.

The women's softball game against Springfield scheduled for yesterday afternoon at 3:00 p.m. was cancelled and will be played today at 2 p.m. behind NOPE. Springfield won an earlier season match with the Minutewomen.

In what turned out to be a pitcher's duel to the greatest degree, the premiere team of softball players representing the Collegian were victorious over their media counterparts WMUA, 19-14, on Sunday.

Stickers take on Chiefs

By TOM CROWLEY

Possibly being the last game of the season, the UMass lacrosse team faces the Springfield Chiefs today behind Boyden at 3:00 p.m.

The game against Springfield is the last scheduled home game and will be senior day. Middlebury was scheduled to play UMass Saturday but they have been invited to the ECAC College tournament. If they win the first game Friday, Saturday's title will be cancelled.

Being the possible last game has made the game a little bit more important.

All the seniors will start and play the first half, "Win, lose, or draw" according to coach Garber. Jim Haddad will start in goal, Bill Blaustein and Kurt Olson (both regulars) at defense, John Martin, Gene Hardiman and Bill Arnold as middies, and Frank Garahan and Peter Connolly on attack.

The seniors probably remember the last time the Minutemen played the Chiefs. The Gorillas beat Springfield 19-3 in a regional tournament two years ago.

This will be the first regular season meeting for both teams as Springfield is trying to upgrade its schedule by playing better competition. "They've dominated college lacrosse for the last two years," coach Garber said.

Brown dominated the Chiefs, though, as two weeks ago the Bruins beat Springfield badly. Springfield also won its last two games in overtime in what started as an optimistic season.

Springfield is led by two outstanding midfielders, Eddy Crover and Bob Ambrose. "They are two excellent midfielders. I suppose they represent the bulk of their offense," Coach Garber said.

"Other than that, I don't know that much about them. I haven't seen them play this year," said Coach Garber, "but it's sort of like David and Goliath."

SCOOP SHOTS... One senior who will not play is co-captain Bill Collins who has requested eligibility for next year. He missed most of the present season with a shoulder injury ...Some seniors might play after the season is over, Coach Garber has nominated them for both the New England All-Star game June 1 and the North-South game at Cornell on June 14.

Fenton captures MVP

By JOHN BOCK

Two time heavyweight New England Champion Dennis Fenton walked away with most of the honors at Monday evening's wrestling picnic. The amiable sophomore from Springfield, Massachusetts was awarded the University's Most Valuable Player trophy for wrestling in the 1974-1975 season. He received the team trophy for the most pins and capped the evening by being elected to Captain the 1975-1976 Minuteman wrestling team. Fenton, a physical education major, has compiled a 45 - 7 - 4 record in two years of wrestling for UMass, including back to back New England University Wrestling Association Championships at heavyweight. In the fall Fenton plays football for the Minutemen at defensive tackle.

"I think that we can be New England Champs next year," said Fenton in his speech to the team," if we listen to the coach and start getting ready now."

The award to the teams Outstanding Wrestler went to this year's captain, Cliff Blom. Blom, a junior from Copiague, Long Island, was 12 -2-2 on the season before a severely separated shoulder, incurred in the Yankee Conference finals, forced him to the sidelines for the balance of the season. Blom served as part of the coaching staff for the rest of the season. His freshman year he was New England runner-up at 150 pounds and last year fourth at the same weight.

The Outstanding Freshman wrestler was Kevin Griffin, third in the New Englands at 150 pounds. Griffin, who hails from Brookline, Massachusetts came on strong at the end of the season and was the only Minuteman to win a consolation finals match in the New England's.

Coach Homer Barr, completing his tenth season at the helm for UMass, characterized the past season as " ... a lousy season. I had thought when we started in the fall that we would be better contenders for the New England title than we were the year before. But, then I have never had a team that had the bad luck with injuries that we did. The key to success next year, though, is to get ready for next year now and not in October."

Beta Phi in IM finals

By RUSS SMITH

Well, they did it again. The Fratmen from Beta Kappa Phi are once again headed for the finals of intramural softball playoffs.

Last night, B.K.P. met the Dodo's in a semi-finals contest. BKP came out gunning early against the Dodo's pitcher, Scott Bial, scoring two runs in the opening inning. The second inning brought more of the same. Leadoff batter Chuck Role hit a long triple into center field. A ground ball by Jim Palermo forced the throw to first while the run scored to make it 3-love. Mike Hislop then hit a home run into left-center for what later proved to be the winning run, as BKP led 4-0.

The Dodo's didn't play dead yet. In the bottom of the third, pitcher Tom Burke sandwiched two free passes to first base around an out, to give the Dodo's their first real scoring threat. Dan Desaulnier then laid down a decent bunt, except BKP first baseman Dave Mucciarone combined with catcher Dave Robinson to get the Dodo runner out at home. Tom then loaded the bases on another walk, before John O'Donnell unloaded a two-run double, to close the gap to 4-2. But this was as close as the Dodo's would get today.

BKP iced the game with three insurance runs in the top of the fourth. Neal Pichel hit what should've been a three-run homer (one run was already in when he got up to bat via a couple singles and a walk) but he was out at the plate as the ump ruled he had missed homeplate (which he had, he stepped over it). Nevertheless, he got the two RBI's which is what counted anyways.

Beta Kappa Phi then just played the game out and won it 7-3. They will now play the Ballbusters who miraculously beat the Dodo's 5-1 in their semi-final matchup.

Lacrosse — way of life for 'Chief'

By BEN CASWELL

Kevin Patterson plays lacrosse for UMass with a stick that he made himself.

Lacrosse, of course, is more than just a game for Patterson, it's a way of life.

You see, Kevin was born near Niagra Falls, a nearly full-blooded Tuscarora Indian. And for Indians lacrosse goes a long way back.

"I guess it used to be almost like war," said Patterson about the way the Indians used to play lacrosse. Tribes would play each other on large fields with unlimited numbers of participants. And you thought UMass lacrosse was crazy!

Patterson, a gigantic 6'7", 230 lb. sophomore, has been playing lacrosse since he was five years old.

"But what the Indians play is box lacrosse," explained Patterson. Box lacrosse is a smaller version of the better known field lacrosse that most people are familiar with. It is played in a boarded off area similar to a hockey rink. Players use smaller sticks, less equipment and more insanity.

"It's a very rough game," said Patterson, "if you stand still for a second someone is going to hit you and hit you hard."

Patterson first played box lacrosse on his reservation in tribe leagues. "I always played in the age group ahead of my real age," said Patterson. Of course that had a little something to do with Kevin's size.

When Patterson's parents moved to Maryland, which is a hotbed for field lacrosse talent, it was still awhile before Kevin played field lacrosse.

"I've played box lacrosse for 14 years," he said, "but I didn't start playing field lacrosse until high school."

And now playing for Garber's Gorillas here at UMass he says that box lacrosse is still his favorite; a player is able to shoot faster and there is less running all over the place.

About that stick that Patterson uses, his father was a school teacher for many years before retiring to the Tuscarora reservation where he now makes lacrosse sticks for a living. Kevin, of course had an in for a summer job last year and what could be better for his play than a custom-made stick?

By the way, the "Chief", as he is sometimes called by his teammates and friends (and he says he doesn't mind), leads the UMass lacrosse team in goals with that personnally hand-made stick.

That must be what the man meant when he talked about keeping it in the family.

Patterson takes a breather. The UMass attackman scored more goals than any other player.

Patterson rides an opposing netminder. Size is no problem for the Niagara Falls native, because most of the time he towers over opponents.

A Tuscarora Indian, the big UMass sticker is known as "Chief" by his teammates. Here he's in perfect position as the Gorillas click for a goal.

Khmer Rouge brute force hit

Lon Nol calls bribe 'crazy lie'

HONOLULU (UPI) — Former Cambodian President Lon Nol yesterday called for world condemnation of alleged Khmer Rouge atrocities in his country and blamed Cambodia's defeat on "the brute force massed against us by a determined coalition of Communist aggressors."

Despite acute shortages of promised U.S. aid and armaments, the Lon Nol said he did not feel America had betrayed Cambodia.

He produced a cabinet-signed document inviting him back to Phnom Penh as evidence of the "crazy lies" that he had been given a million-dollar bribe to flee Cambodia and had taken with him tons of government gold.

During an hour and 45 minute discussion of Cambodia and himself — his first since leaving Phnom Penh — Lon Nol also said:

—He had no knowledge of any American pressure to remove him from office.

—The Communists had violated the Geneva accords on warfare and treatment of POWs and had ignored the principles of diplomatic immunity.

—He hoped the United States would allocate land to the Cambodian refugees so that they might support themselves and add to America's prosperity.

The 62-year-old marshal, attired in aloha shirt and green slacks, said the Cambodian war had been ill-conceived five years ago with no provision made for replacement of lost or destroyed armaments.

"We were worn down by brute force," he explained through Chhang Song, the Louisiana State-educated former minister of information who had been the youngest Cambodian minister in the Lon Nol government.

"There was a lack of coordination and an absence of mutual assistance among the anti-Communist countries, especially those nearby. Except for an occasional border sortie by the South Vietnamese, Cambodia fought the entire war without foreign troops while there were never less than 30,000 North Vietnamese fighting alongside the Khmer Rouge."

The marshal's anger turned to head shaking laughter as he explained the alleged million-dollar bribe and gold theft. He brought out a carefully folded hand-written paper which he and Chhang Song went over sentence by sentence.

"I was never paid a million dollars to leave Cambodia," he snapped. "When I left it was on a diplomatic mission whose expenses were to be paid in monthly installments through a government letter of credit issued on the Bank of Cambodia. We were only able to draw a small amount when the government fell and this paper became worthless.

"As for the tons of gold," he said, shaking his head in amazement, "how was I supposed to have done it? There was only one airplane when we left Cambodia. Then we transferred to the Indonesian plane, and then we flew here from Guam in an American Air Force jet. It would have been impossible to have carried even a small amount of gold to say nothing of the 16 tons I was supposed to have brought away with me."

The president said his financial situation could not even be described as "comfortable" by American standards, and said he was going to have to be "very tight" to support his family in Hawaii.

Ship seizure: Pueblo revisited

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UPI) — On a cold winter day in 1968 off the coast of North Korea the tiny electronics intelligence ship USS Pueblo bobbed into an international maelstrom when Communist gunboats fired on it and forced its surrender.

The Cambodian seizure of the unarmed American cargo ship Mayaguez and its 39 American crewmen Monday occurred just as unpredictably and evoked memories of that other capture more than seven years ago.

North Korean gunboats seized the Pueblo, crammed with sophisticated electronic intelligence gathering equipment, on Jan. 23, 1968, claiming the vessel had penetrated the Communist nation's 12-mile territorial limit to carry out spy activities.

Then U.S. Secretary of State Dean Rusk described the incident as "in the category of actions to be construed as an act of war." But despite that, the Pueblo became the first American warship since 1807 to suffer the insult of being boarded in peacetime by foreigners on the high seas.

Before Cmdr. Lloyd M. Bucher and his surviving 81 crewmen were released after 11 months of captivity and torture, the Communists demanded and received an American admission of intrusion — one which the U.S. immediately repudiated.

While the men were kept in a prison near the North Korean capitol of Pyongyang, the incident became a nagging issue in America as private and unsuccessful talks dragged on between the U.S. and the Communists.

Individuals formed committees to pressure the government to take "necessary" action to free the men, while the question of blame for the seizure and what was to be done about the crew became a issue in the 1968 presidential campaign.

Some, including the Rev. Paul D. Lindstrum who formed the "Remember The Pueblo Committee," advocated a hard line approach to the seizure that included taking the ship by force if necessary. Others, like then Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, R-Calif., urged the State Department to "seek justice" before the World Court.

During their capture, the Pueblo crew became the victims of a concentrated application of physical and psychological torture that included the threat of execution until "confessions" were signed by Bucher and others that the Pueblo's spy mission had taken them into North Korean territorial waters.

The men also became the instruments of a concerted propoganda campaign on the part of the North Koreans to portray as humane the treatment received by the crew and support the claim that the "confessions" were willingly offered.

Photographs were circulated showing some of the men pointing to maps and talking with journalists while tables piled with food stood in the foreground. The crewmen, in turn, used sign language in group photographs later translated by deaf mutes to spell out a message of "help."

The ordeal did not end when Bucher and his crew walked into South Korea on Dec. 22, 1968. A five-admiral Navy court ended a three-month inquiry in 1969 by recommending that Bucher and his executive officer, Edward R. Murphy, Jr., be tried before a court martial.

Old-line Navy brass showed little sympathy for Bucher's explanation that North Korean gunboats hopelessly outgunned the Pueblo, and that further resistance would be futile after one man was killed and 11 wounded.

Newsmap shows area in which U.S. vessel Mayaguez is being held by the Cambodians. The ship was seized Monday at the island of Poulo Wai, 60 miles off the coast of Cambodia, and forced to remain at the island of Koh Tang, about 30 miles to the north.

Laos evacuation starts

VIENTIANE (UPI) — The United States has decided to evacuate some Americans and their dependents from Laos following the emergence of the Communist Pathet Lao as the dominant force in the coalition government, an authoritative source said yesterday.

Unofficial sources said some Americans already are making preparations to leave.

In Washington, however, White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said "no evacuation has been ordered."

The report from a U.S. Embassy source came as the Pathet Lao continued to tighten its grip on Laos by purging more loyalist generals and grounding the rightist-controlled air force — except on express orders from the Communist defense minister.

Observers noted that besides removing a threat of air attack against Pathet Lao forces, the grounding could also allow the Communists to starve out rightist enclaves located behind cease-fire lines which are dependent on aerial supply.

Radio Hanoi said right-wing soldiers have revolted in Vang Vieng province north of Vientiane and gone over to the Communist side. The report followed charges by Radio Hanoi that right-wing forces headed by resigned Defense Minister Sisouk Na Champassak attempted to stage a coup last week.

In addition to thinning out American personnel and dependents, the source said the U.S. is considering shutting down operations in some parts of Laos.

The source said it has not yet been determined how many of the approximately 820 official Americans and their dependents in Laos would leave as result of the continued unsettled security situation.

Until yesterday American officials had said there had been no decision on removing any part of the American presence in Laos although they acknowledged various contingency plans were in existence.

The disclosure came as Vientiane emerged from a three-day holiday weekend that saw the resignation and flight from the country of resigned pro-American rightist ministers and fired loyalist generals as well as a large number of other senior military officers.

Many civil servants stayed away from their desks Tuesday. At the finance ministry about 200 workers staged a demonstration of senior officials they charged with corruption and the promotion of the Pathet Lao deputy minister, Boussabong Souvannouvong, to fill the vacant minister's post.

Neutralist Prime Minister Souvanna Phouma issued a communique over national radio yesterday giving civil servants until tomorrow to report to their jobs or face dismissal. Souvanna also extended until the same time a deadline for military officers to be on the job or be treated as deserters.

Movement starts to kill Cuban sanctions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Organization of American States was asked yesterday to call a special foreign ministers conference July 15 in Costa Rica to remove the legal barriers to the lifting of the 1964 Cuban sanctions.

The Western Hemisphere foreign ministers, meeting here for the fifth OAS General Assembly, are expected to approve before the meeting ends May 19 the request that they gather again in San Jose, Costa Rica's capital, to reform the 1947 Inter-American Treaty of Mutual Assistance Rio Pact.

The Cuban embargo was imposed 11 years ago under the Rio Pact and its revision, particularly that referring to voting procedures, will remove the main present legal obstacle that is keeping the sanctions, considered a Cold War relic, still alive.

Most OAS nations, including the United States, agree now that the Cuban issue has become a divisive one on the Inter-American scene. The failure to get enough votes to end the 1964 ban, coupled with legal formalities, have made recent attempts to lift the sanctions unsuccessful.

The proposed amendment to the Rio Treaty, which the United States has promised not to oppose, would require only a simple majority of the 24 OAS members to lift sanctions against Cuba. A two-thirds majority is now needed.

The sanctions could be lifted at the San Jose as part of the overall Rio Pact reform. Or, the foreign ministers could decide at their Costa Rican meeting to call yet another conference to deal just with the Cuban issue.

The last such attempt to lift the sanctions was made in Quito, Ecuador, last November when a Veneuelan-Colombian-Costa Rican resolution to remove the ban was defeated. Only 12 nations — two less than the needed 14 votes — favored the resolution.

Grenada joined the OAS Tuesday, pushing membership in the organization to 24 nations.

The United States, which defined its position in Quito as one of "strict neutrality," and five other nations abstained in last year's voting. Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay voted against it.

The decision to call the San Jose conference to revise the Rio Pact confirmed earlier indications from Latin American diplomats and U.S. officials that the sanctions would not be lifted during the current OAS meeting, but that a way would be found to deal with the sanctions at a later meeting.

The proposal to call the San Jose conference was made by a four-nation working group which included the United States, Uruguay, Mexico and Costa Rica.

State deficit to skyrocket

BOSTON (AP) — The state budget deficit for the next fiscal year could be as high as $750 million without spending cuts, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis told state agency heads yesterday.

Unless the budget shortfall is substantially pared down state taxpayers would be hit with record tax increases, between $500 million and $800 million, the governor said.

It was his first preliminary estimate of the possible budget deficit for the fiscal year that begins July 1.

The governor met with some 250 agency officials in Gardner Auditorium at the State House to give a pep talk on the need to meet his goal of 10 per cent cuts in present spending for the new fiscal year.

The unusual meeting focused on the budget Dukakis will submit to the legislature in June. He based the estimate of the possible deficit on spending without the 10 per cent reductions. It also included the cost of pay raises for state workers and benefit increases for welfare recipients which the governor has said he opposes.

Later Tuesday, Dukakis urged a legislative committee to speed action on his tax and bonding plan for the present fiscal year.

The governor has proposed $450 million in bonding to meet the deficit for fiscal 1975. He has proposed gasoline and cigarette tax increases to pay interest on the borrowing over a five-year period.

Dukakis told the legislature's Taxation Committee he will accept changes in his program, possibly to include his suggested tax increases in a broadened sales tax that would raise the amount of money.

"This is an extraordinary and painful step," the governor said, "and time is getting short. We must pay our bills, clean the slate and go on to other matters."

Earlier, the governor encouraged state agency heads to use the 10 per cent budget cutting goals for fiscal 1976 to eliminate unnecessary programs and unproductive workers.

He said he would support their recommendations for economizing.

Dukakis told state officials that dismissals should be handled as sensitively as possible and later told reporters that "I hope the last-in-first-out principle is not adopted" for layoffs.

The meeting with agency officials was closed to the press, but reporters in the Gardner Auditorium lobby overheard the governor's remarks.

India to blast another one

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — One year after setting off its first atomic explosion, India is planning new nuclear experiments that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government insists will be only for peaceful purposes.

"The first test definitely was not our last, and we never said it was," said one Indian official.

India became the world's sixth nuclear power last May 18 when it donated an underground blast equivalent to about 12,000 tons of TNT — a little more than half the strength of the first U.S. atomic bomb dropped over Hiroshima in 1945.

The timing of the next test has been a well-kept secret, and there has been no firm indication that a definite date has been set. Nevertheless, Indian officials have confirmed in a series of public comments that preparations are under way for new explosions.

Energy Minister K.C. Pant told a parliamentary committee last October that Indian scientists will need to carry their research into peaceful uses of atomic energy.

N.N. Sethna, chairman of India's Atomic Energy Commission, revealed at a news conference last month scientists have started looking for sites for the next test. He declined to say when it would take place.

The first Indian nuclear device was set off 350 feet below the Rajaşthan Desert at Pokharan, 100 miles from the Pakistan border.

Sethna last May had initially ruled out any new nuclear tests until studies were completed from the first blast. Those studies ended last month, with the Atomic Energy Commission claiming in its public report that all radioactivity from the test was successfully contained below the earth's crust.

There is growing concern among Western diplomats that India's next nuclear test will have serious international repercussions, causing another setback to normalization of relations with Pakistan and once again increasing the danger of more countries deciding to go nuclear.

Observers here believe it is significant that U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, in a speech Monday in St. Louis, attacked the first Indian nuclear test, something he had not done earlier.

Nukes to inundate nation

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) — The United States may need as many as 700 nuclear power plants by the turn of the century to handle its energy power demands, a federal energy official says.

Dr. Robert Seamans, first administrator of the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration, said Monday night his agency is attempting to iron out the various problems facing the approximately 55 nuclear plants now in operation.

He said ERDA was concentrating on the issue of nuclear fuel storage. Several nuclear plants throughout the nation say they may soon run out of facilities in which to store spent nuclear materials.

"The United States must have a strong nuclear industry if it is ever to solve its energy problems," he added.

Turk gets knuckle sandwich

BARA, Turkey (AP) — An assailant using brass knuckles attacked Turkish Premier Suleyman Demirel yesterday and fractured the permier's nose. A government minister described the attack as an "assassination attempt."

It was first physical assault on a Turkish premier since an assassination attempt on the late Ismet Inonu 11 years ago.

A government communique issued several hours after the attack said four stitches were required to close a cut over the premier's fractured nose. It said there were other minor cuts and bruises on his face, but Demirel's condition was satisfactory.

The communique identified the assailant as Vural Onsel, 34, an unemployed Turk. It said he was involved with the youth branch of the main opposition Republican Peoples party of former Premier Bulent Ecevit.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by stella wilder

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14 – Born today, you are a perfectionist by nature -- and you seek perfection on every level of your life: in your career; your social life; your religious or spiritual life. Needless to say, you are very often disappointed, for life on any level cannot give all that you ask of it. Even when disappointed, however, you know the personal satisfaction of having tried your very best to achieve the ultimate in results; that you have failed may disappoint you, but it can never cause you concern over your own worth.

Blessed with an extremely healthy ego, you are a marvelous friend to others, for you see in them the same human values you see in yourself -- values which you respect and admire for themselves alone, whether or not they aid you in the gaining of success. You seek to back winners every time -- but you do not give up on people or projects who are not winners. Rather, you spend time and effort attempting to discover the source of problems leading to failure – and more time and effort seeking solutions.

You enjoy greatly those comforts and pleasures which only money can buy -- but you seek a perfection of spirit which does not allow you to envy others or to waste time yearning for what you cannot have. Thus, if you are fortunate enough to have the financial wherewithal to purchase material luxuries, you will revel in them. But if you are not so fortunate, you will not grieve; you will go to work instead.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Thursday, May 15

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Insist upon making your own way at this time. You may be offered aid by many – but you would do well to refuse it. Try your own wings.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Family matters may keep you busier that you expected this morning. Take care that you don't disappoint another by acting in haste -- and failing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Offer a helping hand to someone in distress. You may have to rely more on instinct than on book learning to come up with the right answer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) —You would be wise to put off trying to solve a complex personal problem at this time. Take what comes -- and be prepared for a surprise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) —So long as you are equipped for the job, all should go well. Don't expect to be kept waiting – but wait patiently if you must. Take tips from the young.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) —If you know what you wish to accomplish at this particular time, there's no need to wait. Begin at once to work toward a known goal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Financial difficulties may make this a tense day for Scorpio. If you can admit to personal debts, you'll be better off in the long run.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) —Whatever disturbs you must be gone into at once. Don't allow yourself to suffer in silence; express your concerns openly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) —If you can do nothing about an early morning setback to restore the situation to its original state, you can at least learn to cope with what is.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) —An unexpected early morning event may keep you from your appointed rounds today. Explain the situation; you will certainly be forgiven.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Be wise in your approach to another in difficulties. This is no time to be practical; it is a time to be sensitive and sensible.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Keep to tried-and-true rules of the game -- whatever game it may be. To try to do things your own, different, way may be to forfeit all gain.

Elections will be held at the table on the concourse level of the Campus Center with closed balloting. Balloting ends on Friday at 4 p.m.

The Union Stereo Co-op has been operating since February and currently has 80 members. The Co-op sells stereo components at low prices. There are people available to help choose components best suited to individual needs. The Co-op also has a large selection of records and tapes available at 44 per cent below list price. Membership is open to all UMass students for $5.00 a year.

The Co-op has no headquarters but has a table Monday, Wednesday and Friday on the concourse of the Campus Center. In the fall the Co-op hopes to have permanent space in the Campus Center.

Richards speaks tonight

Fielding's 'Thumb' debuts tomorrow

Tom Thumb, Henry Fielding's farce parody of 18th Century Classical Drama, and the final University Theater production of the STUDIO 75 season, opens tomorrow in Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest Residential College.

Directed by Kat Foley as partial fulfillment of the requirements for a Master of Fine Arts Degree in Theater, the production will run through Saturday.

Tickets for Tom Thumb, at $2.00 for students and $3.00 for non-students, may be reserved by calling the University Theater Box Office at 545-3511 after 12:00 p.m. The curtain for all performances is 8:00 p.m.

Response to county garden project good

Public response to the new Hampshire County community gardens project has been "overwhelmingly positive," according to Vickie Phillips of Northampton, chairwoman of the Hampshire County Garden Committee, which is administering the agricultural program.

Ms. Phillips says that more than 200 county residents, including a number of area college students, have signed up for garden plots on the county land allotted for the project off Burts Pit Road next to Northampton State Hospital.

Ms. Phillips noted that some of the land is being made available for gardening by such local community groups as the State Street Halfway House, 4-H, Threshold, and the Comprehensive Children's Center.

All county residents who have signed up for garden plots are urged to attend an information meeting Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the D.A. Sullivan School, on South St., in Northampton. At this meeting Ms. Phillips will review some of the rules pertaining to maintenance of the garden plots, and John Howell of the Agricultural Extension Service and organic gardener Vera Fisher will conduct a question-and-answer session on technical gardening problems.

Years of bad advice

I don't know. I try to pass myself off as not being as dumb as I look, but sometimes it gets me in trouble.

There are times that I think I should have listened to the advice of other people. If I had I would have been a totally different person that I am.

If I had listened to my mother all these years by now I would have wound up being a housewife in West Newton with three kids, grey hair, a dog, and stretch marks. Wonderful.

If I had listened to my sister I would have been lying on the beaches somewhere in the Carribean eating native fruit and smoking splifs. I should have listened to her.

If I had listened to my guidance counsellor in High School, I would have gone to a vocational school, become a secretary, worked a nine-five job and had an all electric apartment in a city somewhere. And probably bummed out, too.

If I had listened to my piano teacher tell me that I had great rhythm but no talent I would have started drumming and become a rock star. Well, it's a nice pipe dream at least.

If I had listened to the punks on the street corners, I would have been dead by now.

If I had listened to Bill Densmore, I would be the hot shit reporter for the Globe. I'd also have three ulcers.

If I had listened to my grandmother I never would have learned English. But I'd be able to make one helluva chicken soup.

If I had listened to Rox, I would have relearned Yiddish and been able to make one helluva lokshun kugul.

If I had listened to Frank, I would have been crazy.

If I had listened to Claudia, I would have been sane.

istened to my professors tell me what I should do, I would have quit school and become a waitress. Now I have a degree, and have become an educated waitress.

I'd rather listen to Louis, Linda, Freeport, Bruce, David, Cliff, Scott, Sue, B.J., Kathleen, Mushroom, Rufus, and the rest of the crew tell me to let it flow.

And I'm glad that I listened to Jimi, because whatever I am

I am what I am
thank God.

What should happen in Boston

This afternoon, a delegation of UMass students led by SGA head John W. O'Keefe will meet with President Wood on the red hot issue of budget cuts. And tomorrow, O'Keefe and many of the same students are scheduled to talk to the Governor on the same issue.

The issue, simply, is whether students will back Dukakis' in calling for a flat ten per cent cut back in the University's present $101.4 million, or if they will instead back President Wood is his firm opposition to such cuts. Wood says he will make reductions, but he refused to do it on a percentage basis.

If students side with Dukakis, the position of this University's administration will be seriously and publically undermined, because students as consumers will be saying their University has fat and wasted manpower. In the long run, it could mean the defeat of Wood as a political force in this state.

But it will most surely, at least for the present, reduce the credibility and autonomy of UMass if the governor can supercede its President.

Dukakis' intervention in the budget battle is clearly the kind of political interference that has no place in an academic institution. This University is responsible to the public — through its lay board of trustees. The governor can appoint those trustees as the terms of those presently on the board expire. Truly, the citizens do have power over the operation of this institution, although a limited power. For Wood virtually controls the Board's decisions on routine or complicated matters. Moreover most of the board members are fat cats with little understanding of what it is like to be a poor student on a fixed income trying to go to school.

But the power or non-ower of the trustees is an issue for another time and forum.

If students side with Wood, they are shutting out Dukakis, and saying, in effect: "We believe in what Bob Wood is doing with this University." Because of issues like mandatory dorm living, cooperative married housing and a continuing in loco parentis attitude fostered by administrators, this may be as distasteful a path to take.

So we students are damned if we do and damned if we don't. This big political wigs in Boston are using us as a go between to fight our battles for them. But we can't do nothing, because then our interests will go unrepresented.

When O'Keefe and the other emissaries visit Wood, they should put him on notice that students intend to have a say in the priorities of the University. They should tell Wood that they will keep in close contact with Joseph Healey, Trustee chairman and other trustees — the people who have the real power to make money decisions. They should tell Wood that administrators on all three campuses and in his office will be expected by students to pull their own weight — or else the Legislature will hear it loud and clear.

But in turn, the students should tell Dukakis a thing or two. They should refuse, as Wood has suggested, to submit to an arbitrary percentage cut in the University budget. They should tell Dukakis in the clearest language possible that they will offer no help in such a move.

In any organization as large as UMass, there is waste and fat. Nobody can honestly deny that. Students shouldn't help Dukakis meet any theoretical ten per cent figure. But they should educate themselves about the budget by spending time with the administrators who know about it and insisting that they get copies of the public budget documents administrators like Warren Gulko in Amherst and Phillip Gartenberg in Boston must maintain. And if they can't get hard facts and answers, they should scream about it loud and clear.

Mike Dukakis was, is and ever shall be a liberal. Because he doesn't like Bob Wood's style he is after UMass. But there will be better days in the future and he showed by his comments on campus last week that he does believe in a state university that is academically excellent. The next move is his.

I guess we dropped the budget ball

By JIM KASSNER

Well, the Governor has come and gone, and here we are, seemingly none the better for it. He was standing there, right in front of us, and as they say in the sports world, we choked in the clutch. He was asking, in fact begging us for our ideas and input, so that we could finally straighten out this whole budget cut mess. But we scoffed at him. We were quick to criticize, but offered no alternatives of our own. It seemed as if those who cared enough to rally and demonstrate and strike stopped caring when confronted face to face with "the enemy". You have to start wondering about the sincerity of some of these people, whether or not they really believe in their cause, and didn't just jump on the bandwagon. Are these people who flow with the tide, carried by the current of emotion? When it's popular to smoke dope, will they smoke? When it's popular to drink beer, will they drink? And when it's popular to protest a war, will they do that too?

Granted, there are those who are firmly and truthfully against the issue. But I can't help wondering if this whole protest thing is masquerading for most as a nostalgia trip for those who missed the excitement of the sixties demonstrations. A protest is a good way to let out your frustrations, yet enjoy yourself in spite of your cause. But it can snowball into a massive campaign against something that most people don't understand. And often it can end up in something as senseless as a Kent State tragedy. I'm not saying that protests in general are bad; on the contrary. I believe that they are not only worthwhile, but necessary, provided that those who participate have a clear understanding of the issues, and really mean business. But on this campus, it appears that very few of us really understand politics or economics well enough to speak out against a budget cut with such ferocity. Politicians are used to these types of protests, and can probably pick out the true from the false. Sure, we'll all sign petitions, and write our Congressmen. But when it comes to actually doing something about the issue, well, let past events speak for themselves.

Most likely, Dukakis wasn't the least bit surprised at the reception he got, nor was he surprised at some of the questions he was asked. For him, this whole charade was an excuse to get in front of the cameras, and show up 20,000 screaming kids in Amherst. We could have nailed him, but we didn't.

So now, with the semester just about over, there's little more we can do. It's too late to organize any other type of protest, and besides, we've been given one chance and probably won't be given another. The final decisions on budget cuts will be made when school's out, and by next fall, the issue will be dead. I guess we did send our message to Boston after all. But did it get lost on the way over?

Re-open Rosenberg

To the Editor:

The Amherst Committee to Re-Open the Rosenberg Case held a demonstration in front of the courthouse in Northampton last Friday, May 9. The demonstration was in protest of the failure of the F.B.I. to release their files on this case as the Freedom of Information Act requires.

Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were electrocuted by the U.S. government nearly twenty-two years ago. Their co-defendant Morton Sobell, served over eighteen years in federal prison. The charge of conspiracy to steal the secret of the atom bomb for the Russians has been systematically dissolved and disproved by investigators and legal analysts over the years. What is now needed is a thorough investigation of the F.B.I. files and a re-opening of the case.

Why is the Rosenberg case so important? Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were victims of the political repression of the 50's. This was not an isolated phase in our history but has proved to be a system of power that has been refined through the sixties and seventies, resulting again and again in domestic and international incidents — repression and violence towards the civil rights movement, the peace movement, Kent State, Attica, the extended war in Indochina, C.I.A. activities in Latin America and within this country ... The Rosenberg case marks the beginning of the massive domestic surveillance, the mis-use of the judicial system that has only lately begun to be exposed. At the bottom of the Rosenberg case lie many answers to the abuse of power by the C.I.A., F.B.I., and the judicial and executive branches of government. The cover-up continues. The Rosenberg files must be released.

The Amherst Comm. to Re-Open the Rosenberg Case

Super bust

To the Editor:

As representatives of the band "Overnight Sensation" which played at the so called "Guaranteed Super-Bash," we are sorry for the misconception placed on the students and people at UMass. We were instructed to appear for a meeting at six o'clock at Hampden Commons, which never happened till nearly eight o'clock. At that time the promoter of this "event" made the plans he should have made two weeks before! Because of this type of coordination, and the last minute cancellation of The Bill Collwell Band, the show was a mess to say the least. We as one of the bands had no idea what was going on, and this goes up to the point we actually began to play. Near the end of our first set at Hampden, we were told to do one more set, five minutes later we were told to remain there for the evening. We could not believe it ourselves. Yet the bands got paid, the beer was consumed, and the promoter was over $500.00 in the red. So we are sorry, for you, for the promoter, and for all who went out that night to see what could have been a dynamite show. Maybe somebody with some coordinative nature will put something like this on again, and we can all enjoy a "Super-Bash."

Collegian libe-el

To the Editor:

I should like to correct a couple of misunderstandings which will or may arise from a perusal of Gary McWilliams's article on the University Library's Serials Review Project. [Collegian, May 9, 1975, P.3.]

The first is unhappily in the first sentence, according to which the Library has cancelled some 2,000 serial titles. In fact, the consultation phase of the project is now going on, and cancellations [or non-renewals] will not be undertaken until that phase is concluded, after the end of the semester. The figure 2,000 refers to the approximate size of the group tentatively slated for non-renewal in the initial review, which forms the basis of the consultation process.

Again, the role of the Hampshire Interlibrary Center in the context of the Project needs clarification. In some instances, initial reviewers have recommended that where HILC and UMass both have a subscription or standing order to a given title, UMass should cancel and rely on HILC. What emerged from the HILC Selection Committee on Thursday, May 8, was the statement that HILC has no intention of canceling any of its subscriptions or standing orders, and that those titles may therefore be relied on to be available there. This does not of course mean that UMass will cancel everything that is duplicated in HILC, but that that is an option to be used selectively as other circumstances make it appropriate. Titles treated in this way are, incidentally, included in the figure of approximately 2,000 cited above and in the Collegian article.

It is emphatically not true to say or imply that HILC is expected to pick up all titles which UMass is considering dropping, though UMass will submit recommendations to the HILC Selection Committee in the normal course of business looking toward HILC's picking up some of them.

Finally, although I know what Mr. McWilliams means by the phrase "the already inflated acquisitions budget," it is ambiguous and liable to misinterpretation, especially by people who favor deep cuts in the University budget as one means of dealing with the Commonwealth's fiscal crisis. The acquisitions budget is affected by inflated prices of the library materials acquired, all right, but it is not by any means "inflated" in the sense of being excessive in relation to the University's needs for library materials in support of its programs. Perhaps, however, cuts are inevitable, and the Library has thought it prudent to plan for that contingency: "What would you do if ... ?" That question is the one which the Serials Review Project, with the help of Library users, is primarily designed to answer.

Support for day care

To the Editor:

We strongly support the demands of the Day Care Task Force in their letter of May 8, 1975 for adequate child care services for members of the University community. Making this a high priority item for the University would represent an important first step toward re-orienting our priorities toward meeting the real needs of our community. It would clearly reflect budgeting to provide much needed services to a sizeable portion of our student body that presently is inadequately provided for. Administrators who are concerned that students receive an equal opportunity for a quality education regardless of their economic status, age, race or sex are urged to make every effort to meet the minimal proposals of the Day Care Task Force to continue the two Third World Day Care Centers by providing space and operating funds, and to agree with their other requests which will aid in reassessing the importance of campus day care facilities to meet the needs of all students, faculty and staff.

Warning against cult

To the Editor:

In your Monday article under the title "Two Denials Under Review," Bill Densmore referred to a letter I had presumably written to The Collegian, concerning the tenure cases of Professors Best, Wright, and Tsao, of the Economics Department. Actually, the letter was meant only for Bill Densmore personally. A misunderstanding, I suppose. Had I known it would be quoted, I would have made my points more precisely and sharply.

I would like to use this opportunity to clarify an important issue. In his article, Mr. Densmore put into my mouth the designation of radical economists as "Marxist-oriented." Students and colleagues, who are acquainted with the scholarly and political issues involved, know that I would not be caught dead propagating the popular mythology about radicals by calling them "Marxist-oriented."

If one insists on making a connection with Marx at all, "Marxist-disoriented" might fit them better, as one is bound to find out after some serious study of Marx's work and of problems of socialism in general.

The gravest sympton of radical disorientation, in my opinion, is the gap between their subjective self-image as promoters of progress and their objective social role. It is as if by some "ruse of History" that the world capitalist system oozes forth radical sects and tendencies in the West, to give itself extra protection in the form of intellectual and political confusion manufactured by the so-called "Left." The camouflage of this protective shield is perfect because it looks, to a naive eye, as an attack on capitalism.

On the Western side, contemporary radicalism diverts social energies into inconsequential pseudo-actions, into fadish pseudo-issues, which Western capitalism has no trouble digesting. If there is fracas and violence, it is more than welcome: capitalist media can then use radicals for their entertainment value.

As the same time, radicals provide a symmetrical service to the Far East and Soviet-type varieties of capitalism. Under state-capitalist systems [masquerading as socialism] the road toward emancipation of workers and society is blocked by the dictatorship of the totalitarian establishment. So, our radicals conclude, their task is to celebrate such states and volunteer as their prophets preaching to the "Third World."

Obviously, these broad hints are a poor substitute for a fully developed argument. Students who meet questions of Marxism and socialism for the first time in the distorted form in which they emerge from the radical prism, cannot be blamed for assuming they are getting the "real thing." Mainstream economics and other social sciences give them precious little help in orienting themselves. It is really left to their own determination to know and understand.

Planning for plants as rooms turn to boxes

By
JUDITH WOLINSKY-SOLOWAY
Below the Salt Staff

Glance around your dorm or apartment room. For those of you who are leaving at the end of the semester, it will soon be time to convert the room back to its original state; an empty four-walled box.

Memories that are so vivid now about this year's experiences will fade into the mind zone marked "past" too quickly. In the midst of all the packing and jamming wrinkled clothes, well worn textbooks, and other memorabilia into cartons, suitcases and any other available container, friends are forgotten.

Friends who have brightened up your day and listened to your problems without a complaint will be tossed into the corner with all your other trash.

Who could I possibly be talking about? Certainly its not Chris who lent the money the time you needed to get home. Or Sandy who dropped in for a chat now and then.

No, I'm speaking about Martha the potted palm, Max the Diffenbachia, and Charlotte the spider plant. They were so cute when you got them as a cutting, as a gift, or bought them in the Campus Center.

My goodness, that thumb you had suddenly turned green! How proud you were when the first new leaf sprouted. A proud parent. How sad you felt when a leaf suddenly turned brown, the plant wilted, or bugs appeared. Then it was time to play plant doctor and nurse the patient back to health.

But what to do with your plants now? After all they aren't good travelers, they can easily be crushed, frozen or burned.

It isn't such an easy decision to make. Abandoned dogs and cats will find new homes much more easily than your three foot wall-climbing ivy.

But what' so fair about tossing them out along with the momentos of the year, Michelob beer labels, Anthropology 101 notes, etc?

Then there are those who think that leaving the plants behind on the windowsill or out in the hallway is the answer. If you forget about them; maybe they won't need any water or sunlight. Maybe the person who cleans up the room will take them all home. Maybe.

According to dorm peronnel, many plants are left behind at the end of spring semester.

Your end of the bargain is to bring your adoptable plants to a dropoff point in Whitmore, the Veterans Office in room 239. What could be simpler? The wandering Jew plant will wander no more. The strawberry begonia will make new friends. Give your plants a chance for a new life!

Indian PowWow concludes Native American Symp

By PETER PENNIE
and JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

The Native American Symposium concluded at UMass this weekend with a traditional Indian Pow Wow by the campus pond. Some 200 people were exposed to Indian music, dancing and other ritual for the first time.

According to Ellen Caracciolo of the Wounded Knee Defense Committee at UMass, "the Pow Wow was both a fund raising event for the American Indian Movement and an educational consciousness raising experience through a cultural celebration."

Chief Frank Fools Crow, Sioux Medicine Man began the Pow Wow with a pipe ceremony. Speaking through his interpreter, Mathew King, Fools Crow called upon the Federal government to address demands issued by the Native Americans during negotiations at Pine Ridge, South Dakota.

"If the demands are not acted on, I plan to call our warriors together to take over the Black Hills," he said. The Black Hills are considered sacred land by the Sioux people.

According to one speaker at the event, the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee recently obtained a landmark decision over Indian peoples' rights.

In Minnehaha County, South Dakota, Sarah Bad Heart Bull and four others were on trial charged with inciting a riot and arson. These charges grew out of a demonstration protesting the acquittal of a white rancher on murder charges in the death of Sarah's son, Wesley Bad Heart Bull. The presiding judge, after four separate defense motions, agreed that an impartial jury could not be found in Minnehaha County. The decision opens the way for other judges in the state to question the justice of all white juries sitting on Indian trials, noted Clyde Bellecourt.

Regina Brave Dixon, who was present at the Wounded Knee Occupation last year, said Indian cultural movements were being undermined by the relocation of Indian children into white homes, thus destroying their native identity.

The final speaker was Russel Peters

According to Peters, the Western Indians have stronger cultural identities and traditional values than Native Americans living in the East. The Eastern Indians, he said, have been subjected to "white culture" for so long that many tribes have vanished.

Commuter Assembly compiles 'Oscar' survey

A mass-mailed computerized survey of housing patterns for students is now being compiled by the Commuter Assembly. Commuting students at UMass received the survey by mail last week.

The survey asks for data on the kind, location and price of apartment or dwelling units and asks commuters to describe whether they benefit from area media, including The Collegian. It also solicits support or comment on the possible formation of a Tenants' Union.

The survey, with 70 computer-coded questions, is to be returned by commuters this week.

notes & quotes

UMass Chorus-es tonight

The University Chorus with The University Orchestra will present two settings of the Mass by two composers — Ludwig Van Beethoven and Igor Stravinsky tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The two settings of the Mass being performed are settings of the same text by Beethoven and Stravinsky. Musically, the Mass is the musical setting of the Ordinary of the Roman Catholic worship service. The Ordinary consists of those parts of the worship which are generally unchanged from day to day — feast to feast. It has been set to music by hundreds of composers since the 1300's.

Stravinsky's approach to the text is very objective, characterized by a sparse texture.

UMass Press garage sale

Starting Thursday, the UMass Press will hold a Garage Sale tomorrow, Friday and Saturday, offering overstocked, mildly damaged, and slightly defective UMass Press books at greatly reduced prices. A selection of houseplants and posters will also be up for sale.

The sale will be held from 10:00 to 4:30, outside the Press garage at 505 East Pleasant Street in Amherst (between Village Park and Fraternity-Sorority Park — follow the orange arrows). The UMP staff will be on hand to help you make your selections.

Who did it? It's a mystery. But in any event, the Student Union's taken on a new look.

The struggle for day care

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

Knowing that real threats exist in the future of low-cost day care service on campus, students with children are groping for the necessary lifeline day care provides. Without an adequate day care program student parents are heavily burdened while attending school. Many must drop out. Others are forced to take reduced course loads and find part time jobs.

The Poor Women's Task Force — a grass roots community group made up of student welfare mothers, working student mothers and others with the common element of poverty — have focused much of their recent attention on the impending day care crisis.

Dorothy Savage, a task force member, is a welfare mother of six and a UMass student. She commutes by bus daily from Springfield. Interviewed yesterday, Savage said that Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage made a verbal commitment to support the five existing day care centers last October. However, the words and actions of Gage are contradictory.

According to Savage, Gage has been aware that two day care facilities, Infant Care and New World, have been lacking adequate space since last summer. Both centers have been told to find new homes by June 1. No arrangements for new locations have yet been made. This inaction has severely hampered planning for fall programs.

A Day Care Advisory Committee appointed by Gage last year to investigate day care needs on campus recommended the hiring of a full time day care coordinator. Gage, in a Nixon-esque maneuver has ignored the finding.

Savage cited the excessive number of no-shows by Gage at the advisory committee meetings as evidence of the lack of concern for commuters. Gage made five of this year's 52 meetings.

The crunch is already under way. Incoming Student Government Association (SGA) President John O'Keefe who has been outspoken on the day care crisis, said Gage has decided to terminate the staff and office of commuter affairs, which administrates the bulk of the day care budget.

"The University undertook a $5000 national search for a commuter affairs director," said O'Keefe. "Dr. Helen Hill was chosen. Dr. Gage promised her program support, monies, and three years to set up programs and iron out the bugs. He gave no money and only 18 months."

Task Force member Karen Mangan said, "It's like hitting your head against the wall." Consequently, the task force presented a set of four day care demands yesterday to Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Affirmative Action Officer James De Shields. The four demands are:

—that space be provided for the two Third World Day Care Centers.

—that there be a paid coordinator and staff for Day Care.

—that there be more funds for part-time staff and for work study students to work in day care.

—that the registrar and personnel offices collect and provide data on the number of day care age children in the community.

The administration is expected to make a response today.

Res Life catastrophe thwarted by Gage

By MIKE FAY
Staff Reporter

A post card catatrophe of gigantic proportions has been thwarted by the Robert W. Gage, UMass vice-chancellor for academic affairs, with a little help from his friends.

Gage's friends, the ever-watchful members of the now defunct search committee for a new director of Residential Life, (SCNDRL), nipped the disaster in the bud, by refusing to recognize it. Ken Dean, acting director, will not be in that position in Sept.

RLS Associates, a California based operation skilled in running university residential life systems, practicing good salesmanship, sent Gage a company brochure.

SCNDRL Chairperson Sally Hamilton said that as a normal procedure, Gage forwarded the brochure to Ken Dean, Acting Director of Residential Life.

Hamilton explained, a reply post card was inside the brochure. Dean mailed it to RLS Associates for more information. A few days later two RLS men, conveniently doing a job in Boston showed up here in Amherst. They stayed for three days, did some work, and made a sketchy proposal on how RLS would operate here on campus. And Gage thought the RLS plan ought to be considered.

Hamilton said, "Dr. Gage said, 'Let's hear what they have to say.'" Gage was not available for comment last night.

Consequently SCNDRL met Monday to decide whether or not to consider RLS Associates for the job of Director of Residential Life.

However, RLS Associates missed consideration by a mile. Hamilton explained the search for candidates had already been completed, and new candidates were not being interviewed.

SCNDREL, formed by Gage, refused to consider RLS, and by vote, made that decision legal, final and binding.

Hamilton said SCNDRL extended RLS a courtesy invitation to appear before the committee informally yesterday.

Hamilton said SCNDRL's decision was made on an equal opportunity rationale. She said, "the committee chose not to see RLS because we should evaluate companies against companies."

Hamilton said it is impossible for RLS to be recommended to Gage, who will make the final decision.

As Hamilton said, "It was a fluke these guys showed up here.

Thanks to Gage, a catastrophe was initiated, and then thwarted. His good judgement in setting up SCNDRL, and investing the committee with the authority to find, evaluate, and recommend candidates, to himself, for the final decision, finally neutralized the RLS bid for the Directorship.

The RLS brochure and post card almost foiled the reason for SCNDRL's existence. But, SCNDRL, in an admirable display of provincialism, foiled RLS.

Today, the defunct SCNDRL will make its recommendations to Gage in a letter. "We've come up with two names," she said.

Avoid dorm penalties for room damages

By MEREDITH MANNING
Progressive News Service

This article is the third of a three part series presented to inform people of the problems involved in moving out of apartments, houses or dormitories in the Pioneer Valley.

If you live in a dormitory, you should be aware of the policy of the office of residential life and how you can avoid being penalized for room damages or "losses".

In the past, residential life has hired a crew to inventory damages and missing furniture as well as paint problems and general maintenance. The inventory is compared with the room stock sheets filled out by students at the beginning of the semester.

Students are usually billed for breaking furniture or painting their rooms non-traditional colors. Bills are also sent for dismantled beds.

Students must pay bills within a month from the date of issue. If it exceeds $15.00 and is still unpaid by the deadline, the bill will be turned over to the bursar's office. If the bill is still ignored, the State Attorney General will take legal action.

AAP document to offer new tenure system

New UMass personnel policies by June

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

This is the third in a five part series discussing the tenure system at UMass. The first two articles appeared in Monday and yesterday's Collegian.

The final version of the Academic Personnel Policy (APP) document is expected to be approved, on a one-year provisional basis, at the UMass Board of Trustee's June meeting, according to David A. Booth, faculty senate secretary.

If adopted, the document will for the first time establish a set of University-wide personnel policies that the three campuses will then be required to follow.

The present tenure system has offered faculty and administration a myriad of unwritten procedures to use in making tenure evaluations. Before the first draft of the APP document appeared in February, no formal document existed that pulled together personnel policies for the three UMass campuses.

UMass President Robert C. Wood in Dec. 1973 asked that a multi-campus committee (MCC) form to work on a draft of a University-wide personnel policy document. According to Wood's letter that accompanied the first draft of the document, the intent of the representatives of the faculty, administration, and students from the three campuses was to "draft policies and procedural standards that (have been) needed on a University-wide basis while providing as much flexibility as possible for development of personnel procedures appropriate to the separate campuses."

Representatives of the MCC issued a memorandum in January explaining that the basis strategy of the group was to "devise an academic personnel policy document that would serve the interest of both faculty and the University as an institution at a time when higher education in this country is confronted with serious financial difficulties. . ."

In the accompanying letter, Wood said he "fully subscribes to the dual emphasis on rigorous criteria and high standards on the one hand, and safeguarding the interests and rights of faculty members on the other."

The Amherst members of the MCC were: John M. Maki, professor of political science, and Sidney J. Claunch, associate professor of management and Earl Seidman, former School of Education administrator.

Two drafts of the document have bounced back and forth between the MCC and the Faculty Senate this semester. The Senate suggested approximately 52 changes in the first draft, all of which were incorporated into the second version. The Senate then requested that the MCC make about 23 alterations in the second draft. Fifteen to 18 were accepted.

— It will standardize the criteria by which faculty will be judged. It will give faculty a clear idea of what kinds of standards they must achieve in the areas of teaching, research, and service.

— It will specify the contents of the basic file that each faculty member must present for their tenure evaluation.

— It will identify the responsibilities of the department, dean and provost concerning the evaluation of tenure recommendations.

MCC representative Maki explained that the APP document leaves the present tenure system unchanged. He feels it sets down in writing for the three campuses the basic criteria that shall be applied in judging tenure recommendations.

Booth said he believes Wood's suggestions regarding the adoption of this document are:

— that they revised version be adopted on a provisional basis for one year.

— that both Amherst and Boston be given the use of the fall semester until December to continue their review and evaluation of the document.

— that there be a meeting in April of representatives from the Amherst and Boston campuses, the Board of Trustees, and the president's office to try to consider various changes in the document.

— that the Trustees will have to act again on the document a year from now in order to implement the document permanently.

However, some faculty are questioning whether the document will be able to adequately meet the varied needs of the diverse UMass campuses, here, in Boston and in Worcester.

Maki said that the second revised version of the MCC draft has "made it more clear that each campus has the right to devise its own personnel policies under the umbrella of University policies."

Outgoing provost Gluckstern concurred with Maki, saying, "I would anticipate that each campus will, within the framework (of this document) develop a set of policies and procedures that will take into account the needs of each campus."

Stevenson W. Fletcher, faculty delegate to the Trustees, said he is opposed to a University-wide personnel policy document on the ground that he feels it "rigidly locks in and limits the possibilities of someone doing something innovative yet productive."

Joseph Frank, head of the English department, is skeptical about the institution of the APP document but for a different reason. He is apprehensive about the institution of a University-wide tenure policy "largely because the medical school in Worcester creates problems of its own." Frank said that a tenure policy for both the Boston and Amherst campuses would be "alright."

Although the document does not change the present tenure system, it does allow for changes to be made through Wood's recommendation to pass it on a provisional basis, subject to review and change.

UMass faculty, though they may perhaps be uneasy with the codification of personnel policies into one collection of procedures, will probably now have a definitive document so that they can refer for answers to questions about how the tenure system works at UMass.

VOICE CONTROLLED WHEELCHAIR has been designed by engineering students at UCal-Santa Barbara, according to a story in a recent Daily Nexus.

The team of electrical and mechanical engineers believe it is the first self-contained, motorized wheelchair to be so constructed. Complementing the vehicle is a 16-word, voice-controlled system by which a patient can control a set of household devices including a light, a television, a radio, a motorized bed and even a page-turner for a newspaper.

Begun in 1973 with $200, the project has been funded by the Easter Seal Foundation and the Veteran's Administration with a total of $71,000. In laboratory tests, the wheelchair voice-controlled system has run with 90 per cent success in response to such commands as "Forward," "Right", "Left", "Stop" and "Reverse."

UMd STUDS TAKEN FOR A RIDE by campus cops during daytime or evening shifts, according to a notice in the Diamondback.

The idea is to dispel misconceptions of police as harassers and "pigs." The invitation is extended to students who need only to ask to ride the cruisers and fill out a release form. No hassle.

Seems that the Trustees voted to eliminate intercollegiate football to save $200,000 that will be plowed into other recreational activities, including handball and tennis courts and a swimming pool.

The ball ban is effective Fall 1976.

ART 225 Ann New-Smith
EARLY MEDIEVAL ART
Office: 317-A Bartlett
Office hours: W, 2-3; Th, 12-1

Organization: Informal lecture with discussion.

Aim: To trace the development of Christian art in Western Europe from the early Middle Ages to the beginning of the Gothic period. The course will focus on barbarian and Celtic cultures and their relevance to later Christian art; the Carolingian and Ottonian patronage of the arts; Anglo-Saxon art; and Romanesque art. Particular attention will be paid to the impact of monasticism and the pilgrimage on Romanesque art and to the regional developments in architecture, monumental sculpture, and painting.

Readings: Kitzinger, Early Medieval Art, Focillon, Art of the West, I: The Romanesque, and others.

Requirements: two slide exams, one at mid-semester and one at the end of the course; a term paper.

Prerequisites: Art III or permission of the instructor.

Added notes: Section 1 will be principally a survey of the period; Section 2 will focus more particularly on issues and problems of the early Medieval period and involve more active student participation.

MASTERS PROGRAM IN ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

Antioch-New England has internships available as part of its Environmental Studies Masters Program. Thru internships and the quality of training over 90 per cent of the graduates in the last three years have been placed in degree related jobs.

The goal of the Antioch Environmental Science program is to train naturalist-educators who can use the outdoors creatively in a wide variety of work situations. Students who enter the program may already be certified teachers; may wish to be trained as teachers; or may seek careers in non-teaching areas of environmental studies. The 15-month program is divided between academic classes at the center and one or more internships. Placements are now available in public and private schools, alternative schools, environmental schools, regional planning commissions, conservation agencies, and state and local environmental agencies. A core of courses is offered in Field Ecology, Ecological Theory, Man and Environment, Environmental Education and Environmental Economics, Politics and Law. Other related courses are available to satisfy the program goals of the individual.

APPLICATIONS FOR SUMMER & FALL NOW BEING CONSIDERED

Clean out of job? try Electrolux

College students, wondering how to earn money for tuition or leisure time fun, will find the answer with Electrolux, the big vacuum cleaner company.

Summer jobs, or part-time jobs throughout the year, are open and the Placement Director of this college has the information, or details may be obtained from Electrolux College Educational Fund Award, Stamford, Conn. 06905.

Undergraduate and graduate students are eligible. Last year some students in the Electrolux program had earnings of over $5000 for three months work. The opportunity is being repeated this year.

In addition to commissions paid to students selling Electrolux vacuum cleaners, the company makes special awards to leading sales representatives of $1000, $700 and $500. Last summer, 87 students received bonus awards of $58,400. That's good bread.

The Electrolux program is flexible enough to allow students to work anywhere in the United States. What is more, those who qualify can head for a career job — with good management positions at the end of the rainbow.

Core of radical economists makes UMass national leader

Bowles: "the history of capitalism is a history of millions and millions of small business failures ."

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

It was a typical lecture for Thompson 106. One hundred and three students equally mixed between men and women.

The scruffy professor stood at the podium speaking from notes obscured from view: first looking out-of-focus at the class, then back to the notes, squinting through round gold-rimmed glasses.

"When you work for wages, you're not tied to any place. So if you are not needed in the place you work, you will be laid off," the red-bearded prof said.

No apology to capitalism to be sure. But it was no surprise to the freshman and sophomores in the room one recent Tuesday morning. By now, they have spent over two months listening to Samuel S. Bowles, 36, lecture in introductory economics. But his lecturing is different.

Although most students interviewed said they did not realize it when they enrolled, Sam Bowles is a self-described "radical" economist. Not a bomb-thrower, the phrase simply means he is one of a core of young, recently hired economists at UMass who aren't apologists for the capitalist system.

There are three others, one of whom, like Bowles, was hired with tenure in a nationally-noted attempt by UMass to establish what has been called a "critical mass" of radical political economy on campus.

Economics Professor Samuel Bowles, shown speaking at the anti-budget cut rally in April, is one of several new professors in the economics department, who because of their "radical" beliefs, have helped put UMass at the forefront nationally in free-thinking economy.

No where else in the country is there an economics department with as many free-thinking economists. There are at least eight besides Bowles on campus here, and others on the fringe. Recent additions include:

—Herbert M. Gintis, 34, a colleague of Bowles' at Harvard when the two were plucked by UMass in the spring of 1973. Both received appointments with tenure. Bowles left Harvard after he was denied tenure the previous fall allegedly because of his "radical" beliefs. Gintis choose to leave as well.

—Stephen A. Resnik, 37 and Richard Wolff, 33, both left City College of New York to teach in non-tenured positions at UMass. Resnik had taught at Yale University earlier.

—Michael H. Best, a six-year member of the UMass faculty. In 1971 he was nearly hounded out of the department by the vote of his colleagues. The only radical at the time, Best was joined by the others two years ago. Last Wednesday he was awarded tenure by UMass trustees after favorable recommendations from his tenured colleagues in economics. Best attributed his award to student support. Two other orthodox economists were denied tenure, profs. Arthur W. wright and Che S. Tsao.

The infusion of radical talent has already been credited by some on campus with revitalizing the economics department, which has attracted some of the brightest graduate students in the U.S. And undergraduate enrollments have increased as well, according to the department chairman.

While some of the increase is attributable to an increasing interest in economics as a vehicle for understanding politics, some of it is probably the result of the radical infusion.

Norman I. Aitken, chairman ot economics at UMass, said enrollments are up 61 per cent to 6,005 students a year in the department since 1972. The department now has 32 faculty slots and a number of teaching assistants.

Aitken said the radical is "one important factor in attracting students to our department — especially majors." He said a trend towards career interest in business has also fueled the expanded enrollments.

Rejecting the orthodox, neoclassical economics of Keynes and Galbraith, the group of radicals turn to the philosophies of socialism as an alternative — not romantic fantasy, but as a paradigm to analize the assumption that capitalism provides the most good for the largest number the greatest amount of the time.

The radicals number 1,600 nationwide, and now have their own professional association. Called the Union of Radical Political Economists, the group has been woed recently by the traditional American Economics Assn. (AEA).

While conservative economists, like Chicago's Milton Friedman, would like to see URPE excluded from the mainstream of economics, AEA President Robert Gordon has tacitly embraced it.

. . . he is one of a core of young, recently hired economists who aren't apologists for the capitalist system . . .

But while the dispute within the discipline rages, Bowles and his UMass-Amherst colleagues teach on.

"With the evolution of the capitalist mode of production... the complexity of social relations is greatly reduced. Cross-continental movements that are driven by a need to gain livelihood have a profound implication on society," he said in the recent lecture.

According to Bowles, colonial capitalism allowed multi-dimensional personal relationships in the family, economics, social and religious spheres.

"But with the evolution of the capitalist mode of production, the complexity of social relations is greatly reduced," he feels, leaving only market, work and citizen relationships.

"The history of capitalism is a history of millions and millions of small business failures — and the small capitalist of yesterday is the wage-earning worker of today."

Bowles' students seem sympathetic to his socialist perspective, but in interviews they said he does not advocate any philosophy to the exclusion of others.

A majority of Bowles' students said they signed up for the course not knowing of his radical perspective. They said they simply were interested in gaining knowledge of economics, either because it is their major, or because it will help them understand current problems.

"It is very much a part of what's happening... having this basic knowledge certainly makes it easier to pick-up a newspaper and tell what's happening," said Sandra Lucas, a 29-year-old freshman. From Lawrence, she is a political science major.

Gail Upgaid, a second-semester senior from Amherst, said she took the course to figure out "why things change so in prices and markets." She said she took the course out of "pure interest."

Some students heard of Bowles in advance.

"I wanted to take an economics course and I picked Bowles because I'd heard about his reputation," said Mitch Guild, 20, a sophomore from Longmeadow. "I think it's a really important part of politics — taxes, governmental decisions — its actually more political economy."

Guild said he feels "more informed" taking the course. "I'm not here to develop a career," he added.

One woman who asked not to be identified said she took the course "as a basic part of life", but added that she was considering a career in business.

Seeks to dispel misconceptions

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
Staff Reporter

Jon Hite, newly elected speaker of the Student Senate, yesterday sought to dispel two "misconceptions" that he feels students about the Student Government Association (SGA).

"People don't have the slightest idea of what we do," Hite said in a remark that may go down in history.

Hite, a political science major who is at present suffering from the sophomore jinx, said the SGA is an "advocacy body" for students and that the organization is not a "closed body."

Answering charges that the SGA has not supported the Student Organizing Project (SOP), Hite emphasized that "We are not only a legislative body, we are an advocacy body for students."

He observed that the SGA has funded the SOP to the tune of a whopping $52,000 this year, and that the funding has been in existence for the past few years.

Hite announced that the SGA will be active during the summer in the effort to build support for student unionization. Climbing way out on a limb, Hite asserted, "We will be a hell of a lot closer to unionization (in September) than we are now."

The second myth that Hite shot the hell out of is that the SGA is a "closed group."

John Hite, a sophomore majoring in political science, is the newly elected speaker of the Student Senate.

He said the Student Senate has nine committees and they deal with "every aspect of student life."

He noted the Student Senate has nine committees and they deal with "every aspect of student life."

He noted that committee meetings are open to all, and added, "Any student, whether a senator or not, can join a committee." Hite neglected to mention that committee meetings can be boring as hell.

In what may be the understatement of the year, Hite said, "It is very tough to communicate from the fourth floor of the Student Union Building."

"I wish people could sit down for an hour, to get them to understand how complex things are, yet how easy it is to resolve them," said Hite.

Hite also took a blow at Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, saying the Duke "does not understand UMass.. He urged the governor to come to UMass, walk around, and attend classes, in order to get a clear definition of the problems.

He also sympathized with Dukakis, saying that he can't expect the Governor to devote all his efforts to the University, but added, "It's important that he gets a better perception of where students are at."

Hite flowered praise on the Student Senate, saying that it "worked hard" to come up with this year's budget.

In these hard times of budget cuts, Hite was able to say, "All groups have enough money to maintain programs, and some have money to improve their programs."

He said that although the administration may not think so, the SGA nevertheless managed the budget "very efficiently."

He was hopeful that the Senate could work closer with the administration. "We can look toward a more cooperative, meaningful relationship with the administration. We may not see eye to eye, but at least we will see what the problems are."

O'Keefe admits error

By CHRISTINE DILLARD
MDC Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) President John O'Keefe said yesterday that his decision to help the Governor cut the University budget by 10 per cent was "a mistake".

O'Keefe said he will stand by the no budget cuts demand approved by a University Town Meeting April 17.

A task force has been organized and will meet with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis Thursday to discuss the budget. The task force is also expected to present alternative proposals to Dukakis so that UMass will not have to suffer a cut in the state request of $118 million, according to O'Keefe.

Dukakis, trying to forestall a tax increase despite a deficit budget called on state agencies to reduce their budgets.

"We're going to support the demands of the Town Meeting," said O'Keefe.

The task force is also meeting with UMass President Robert C. Wood today to talk about student unionization, the budget and Dukakis' proposed trimming of the budget. Dukakis is expected to make recommendation to the legislature on the budget next month. The Legislature has final approval on how much money will be allocated to the University.

In the meeting with Wood in Boston, O'Keefe said, the group will focus in on the university governance system and "why we (the students) have no real input."

O'Keefe said his original decision to side with Dukakis was made because he had taken "an over-simplistic approach to the finance problem." If we help Dukakis cut the budget, we help cut our own throats."

In addition, Dukakis can only recommend shaving a certain amount of dollars from the budget. Although the Legislature approves some 16 different accounts in the budget, fiscal autonomy allows the University to transfer money from one account to another after legislative approval, expected this summer.

The University's request from the state for the operation and maintenance of the three campuses has a 16.5 per cent increase over anticipated expenditures for this year.

In another campus matter, O'Keefe said he was developing an alternative system for the SGA which he claimes is "outdated". He also said the present student government system which grants Wood veto power is "a parental relationship".

"A new form of student government is needed, since this one barely works," he said.

"We want to put the proposal on a referendum," he said. The proposed system "would be for the interim period between now and the union," he said. At that time, students would determine the role of student government and its relation to the union.

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) for some time has been working towards the goal of forming a union, similar to an industrial union, for students here.

O'Keefe also claims that the SGA has "too much money" for the work the body accomplishes. Alternatives to the student activities tax billed to students every semester are being researched, he said. He suggested the SGA seek federal grant money and sponsor fund raising events like concerts as possibilities to decrease the activities tax and still bring revenue in for students.

In fac senate report

Panel asks 'cluster' change

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

An overhaul of the "cluster" system at the School of Education as well as a general tightening of graduate programs to make them less susceptible to abuse by individual doctoral candidates will be recommended to the faculty senate at its regular meeting tomorrow afternoon.

The recommendations are contained in the final report of the Senate's Ad Hoc Committee for Review of the School of Education, formed in February to investigate allegations of lax academic and administrative standards at the School.

Authored by the five UMass-Amherst faculty on the committee, the thirty-page report with appendices, is moderate in its criticism of the school and concludes, among other things, that it is "too early to tell" if Whitmore administrators were too easy on the School.

The School's federal programs from 1972 and 1973 are currently under investigation by the U.S. Attorney in Boston since allegations that funds were misued surfaced in January.

The report makes several recommendations that are bound to be disputed by more innovative faculty at the School, many of whom were brought in during the tenure of former Dean Dwight W. Allen.

graduate work of some minority students."

It says some minority grad students who came in with poor training were not forced by the School of "correct" the deficiencies.

"The requirement of personal commitment to an institutional ideological stance such as anti-racism and anti-sexism is inappropriate, no matter how socially desirable the cause may be. A more effective way to deal with these values in an academic setting is through a diverse faculty and student body."

Among the recommendations are:

— "that the school neither require personal commitment of the faculty nor base the curriculum on eliminating sexism and racism in society."

— "that formal examinations appropriate for each competency area or discipline be required and used as a basis for awarding credit for experience and as a guideline for developing graduate programs."

— "that the school continue a thorough evaluation of non-traditional education concepts and if demonstrably inappropriate, discontinue them; if appropriate or desirable make recommendations for other programs on campus."

The committee at one point "endorses the testing of new educational concepts such as modular credit (the flexible curriculum) and alternative grading systems," but says some other innovative ideas should be evaluated.

It says clusters, rather than tradition departments "lack well-defined, coherent educational goals and programs and needlessly frustrate the development of individualized programs for some students" and adds that the grouping of subjects like math and English together was sometimes the result of "personal values and sensitivities ... "

"Clusters emerged, in other words, from a crisis in organizational governance with the result that while there may be congeniality among the faculty of a given cluster, there is no necessary coherence from a programmatic perspective of training students."

The report says further that organization in the School should be based on the "training function". "This is decidedly not the base of the current organization of the School of Education and is at the heart of the School's current weakness in terms of both governance and of program."

The committee reported that they spent seven days and ten half-days researching the School, including the compilation of its history since 1968. It interviewed virtually all the major participants in the School's development, including Allen, former provost Robert L. Gluckstern and former Graduate School Dean Mortimer Appley. It held two meetings with School of Ed faculty.

The members of the committee were John Bracey, of Afro-Am studies; Arthur Kinney of English; Theodore Leed, of food and natural resources; Alice Rossi in sociology and Sidney Sufrin in business administration.

Other major points the group made were:

— The School's response to a 1971 Faculty Senate investigation was "defensive" and "set the pattern of a continual current of antagonism and distrust between the School ... and the rest of the University faculty.

"Several University administrators testified that well over half their time was devoted in those years to School of Education matters.

— Says that UMass, like other schools, showed no hesitation about relying on "soft" (federal) money for programs. Such funds are now under investigation by the FBI.

— Recommends faculty sponsorship of doctoral program candidates should be de-emphasized and incoming candidates should be formally tested on their experiential background, rather than having their knowledge taken for granted towards credit.

— Recommends strict enforcement of regulations which requires degree candidates to live in the area and attend the School because "pursuing an advanced degeee is the opportunity to be part of the intellectual climate and to engage in dialogue with fellow students and faculty."

— Finds there is no basis to claims that School of Education dissertations are of a lower grade than those of other departments, at least on the basis of their verbal content.

Ford alerts Marines

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford was reported yesterday to have alerted 1,000 Marines and sought help from the Chinese in a military-diplomatic effort to win release of an American freighter and its 39 crewmembers held captive at sea by the Cambodians.

Meantime the aircraft carrier Coral Sea and other vessels from the U.S. 7th Fleet were heading for the area in the Gulf of Siam, and Pentagon sources said they would arrive there some time today.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd said yesterday President Ford should set a 48-hour deadline for the release of the American merchant ship seized by Cambodia and take "whatever action is necessary" if it is not met.

U.S. aircraft were making surveillance flights over the container ship Mayaguez and two Communist captor vessels about 30 miles off the Cambodian coast. A Pentagon spokesman said one of the patrol planes was struck by a single shot through its tail section, but damage was so minor the pilot did not know he had been hit until he landed back in Thailand.

U. S. invades Cambodian island

Marines rescue Mayaguez, crew

Compiled from Wires

President Ford announced early this morning all 39 crew members from the captured merchant vessel Mayaguez had been rescued and that U.S. Marines had retaken the ship Cambodia seized Monday.

Ford, speaking about five hours after he ordered Marines to board the ship and invade an island at first thought to house the captured crew, said the U.S. forces were preparing to withdraw.

The mission has been "successfully accomplished," the President added, but the Marines still are under fire while "preparing to disengage."

"I have now received information that the vessel has been recovered intact and that the entire crew has been rescued," Ford said.

He said the military action against Khmer Rouge positions on the mainland were continuing. But he said "the forces that accomplished the mission are still under hostile fire and are preparing to disengage."

"I wish to express my deep appreciation to the entire nation and to the units and the men who participated in this operation for their valor and their sacrifice."

Ford went on national television and radio for his brief, one-minute statement at 12:30 a.m.

First reports by the Pentagon said a Cambodian ship carrying white flags had surrendered 30 of the crewmen after American Marines had seized the ship, invaded a Cambodian island and bombed the country's major seaport.

Just before President Ford spoke on nation-wide radio and television to discuss the situation, administration sources said the last nine of the crewmen had been recovered.

There was no immediate word as to the condition of the crew members.

A Marine boarding party from Thailand found the Mayaguez deserted but a 130-man force dispatched to nearby Koh Tang island in search of the crew ran into armed resistance and the Pentagon said at least "a couple" of helicopters had crashed.

The operations were ordered after U.S. Air Force planes from Thailand sank three Cambodian gunboats and damaged others when the vessels appeared to be attempting to take the Mayaguez crew to mainland Cambodia 30 miles from the ship.

According to one congressman among leaders briefed by President Ford in early evening, the gunboats were attacked after Cambodia's new Khmer Rouge Communist government ignored an ultimatum transmitted through Chinese diplomats to release the ship and crew within 24 hours or face military action.

Minutes before the release of crew members was announced chairman John Sparkamn, D-Ala., of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said he supported military attempts to rescue the men. "I'm sorry it became necessary," Sparkman said.

Earlier, President Ford's order for Marines to recapture the ship Mayaguez from Cambodian troops drew general support in Congress Wednesday night, although some legislators expressed reservations.

"I'm all for it," Sen. Barry M. Goldwater, R-Ariz., said of the operation in the Gulf of Thailand.

House Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., asked whether he though Ford had done the right thing, replied: "You can't second-guess him at a time like this."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously to support Ford's efforts to secure the release of the ship and its crew.

But Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., a longtime opponent of U.S. policy in Indochina, said he was "puzzled why the military strikes came before we had an opportunity to let the diplomatic efforts through Peking work for release of the men."

UMass student dies in fall from library

By BILL PARENT
MDC Staff

A UMass junior, in an apparent suicide jumped to his death from the top of the UMass Library late yesterday.

David B. Harpin, a 21 year old resident of Webster House from Rochester, Mass. reportedly stood atop the library for about a half-hour throwing firecrackers and shouting to the crowd below, before leaping off the 28 story building.

According to Captain Robert Joyce, the UMass police first received a call at about 5 p.m. saying that a man was on top of the library and was intending to jump.

Sargeant Richard S. Grader went to the roof of the building in an attempt to calm the victim. Upon his arrival he found Harpin to be "extremely agitated," saying that he didn't want to live anymore.

After compling with Harpin's request for a soda, Grader attempted to approach him, Harpin backed off, ran, and leapt 286 feet to his death at 5:31 p.m.

Witnesses said there was a small crowd below chanting, "Jump, jump" while Harpin was on the roof.

Captain Joyce told the Collegian last night that it still a mystery as to how Harpin gained access to the roof.

"We have no idea, our own officer had to go through building security to get the key, but we will be investigating the matter," said Joyce.

Library Director Richard J. Talbot also expressed confusion about the matter.

Talbot said, "We don't even have keys to these doors. The twenty-sixth floor is separately keyed."

According to news reports, Harpin's death was the fourth of its kind in the past two years here at UMass.

Prepare for conference with Governor

Wood, students, plan action

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood met yesterday in a closed session with student leaders from Amherst and Boston campuses to plan "strategy" for today's student leader conference with Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Yesterday's meeting, held in Wood's office in Boston, was attended by Student Government Association (SGA) President John O'Keefe, Student Organizing Project (SOP) Director John Fisher and Dudley Phillips. Student Representatives from UMass Boston were also in attendance.

After confering with O'Keefe, Wood said it would be better to keep the meeting's discussion "off the record." O'Keefe said after the meeting, "You don't give away strategy." If the meeting on strategy was made public, the governor would use "avoidance tactics," O'Keefe said.

Wood was not available for comment after the meeting.

In a post-meeting conference, Howard White, assistant to Wood, said the students asked to be directly involved in the university's budget process.

O'Keefe said "reallocations can be made within the university." He reiterated his stand on not supporting budget cuts at UMass.

According to White, in the past there has "never been a legitimate student request made to Wood's office to partake in the budget process...they've usually been vague and uncomprehending," White said.

When asked about the most recent request made by the SGA and Student Action Committee to work on the budget, White said, "It's quite clear they've done their homework."

O'Keefe, beside planning strategy, called the meeting with Wood "to discuss governance procedures at UMass." O'Keefe said Wood will soon release a statement on his stand on student unionization.

White said, at this time, Wood doesn't appear to support a student union because the university is not on an "employer, employe relationship."

White said students objected to "petty harrassment" from the administration on the students effort to unionize. Citing an example, O'Keefe said he received a letter today from Vice Chancellor Robert W. Gage which threatened to make Student Activities Taxes optional for students. O'Keefe said the letter "is an insult" to the students trying to form a union.

Prof sees phase-out of Near East studies

By CYNTHIA BRENNER
Staff Reporter

A faculty member of UMass' Near Eastern Studies program said the recent decision of the History Dept. to terminate his contract could result in the demise of the interdepartmental program.

Assistant Professor David Biddle believes that "there is a strong possibility that if the administration allows my contract to be terminated, it is doubtful they would allow the position to be filled in light of impending budget cuts."

Citing his lack of published material as the sole criteria used in the 5-4 vote against him, Biddle contends that the personnel committee was "ignorant of the great deal of administrative effort and time" he devoted to the program.

In response to criticism that his charges are "defensive and speculative," Biddle made reference to a recent report that evaluated the future of the Near Eastern Studies program, along with the Asian and Judaic studies programs.

"I heard through the grapevine that only the Asian Studies program was recommended to become a regular department and the Near Western and Judaic programs were pushed aside once again," Biddle said.

When asked to state the evaluation's findings, Professor J. Keiser of the Linguistics Dept., chairman of the committee, refused to comment.

According to Biddle, the solution is two-fold:

"First, the administration must decide if they are going to support the Near Eastern studies and commit the required resources — specifically, two personnel positions," he said.

"Second, if the administration will have the history department reconsider the termination of my contract because of my involvement with the program," he added.

Faculty sees student role need

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

This is the final article in a four part series discussing tenure at UMass. The first three articles appeared in Monday, Tuesday and yesterday's Collegian.

Many faculty members have been "scratching their heads" these days in an effort to identify problems and suggest constructive changes in the present tenure system. Prodded by the discussion of the soon-to-be adopted Academic Personnel Policy (APP) document, UMass faculty members have stopped trying to find fault with the APP document and have attempted instead to discover positive ways to change the tenure system. Extending their comments beyond their own participation in the tenure system, faculty are beginning to recognize the need for an assessment of the role of students.

Faculty members acknowledge that their role in the system of public higher education necessarily exposes them to evaluation by their peers as well as by several levels of administrators. Recently, however, they are becoming more aware of the part students play in evaluating them as instructors. The use of teacher and course evaluation forms is one method that is presently used to assess a teacher's performance in the classroom.

As evidenced by the recent student moratorium protesting the state legislature's proposed ten per cent cut in the UMass budget, students are demanding that their rights be recognized and that there should be student input into all decision-making processes which affect them in any way.

Presently, faculty members are judged by their peers on departmental and school or college personnel committees. Students' feelings as to which teachers should be retained and which are not worth keeping are now only recorded on the course and teacher evaluation forms which are passed out at the end of every semester. Often these forms are computerized forms asking students to circle and judge a professor and his course by such arbitrary and undefined words as: excellent, good, fair, poor, etc. Such forms often become part of a faculty member's departmental folder.

Faculty members generally feel that student assessment of the quality of their courses and their instructors is "useful" but that it shouldn't go beyond the passive act of filling out forms.

In the view of some faculty and administrators, personnel decisions are their particular "special interest" area, and students, who are so transient, should not participate in any significant way.

Former Provost Robert L. Gluckstern called student input into personnel decisions "useful" but said he is against mandatory student involvement; rather, he thinks it should be a departmental decision.

Arless A. Spielman, dean of the School of Food and Natural Resources, said, "I think student input is particularly valuable and needed in assessing the quality of courses, of instruction, and the quality of their whole education."

Joseph Fran, head of the English department, supports student participation in the form of filling out teacher evaluation forms. He said he had no objection to students sitting on departmental personnel committees providing they are "extremely conscientious" which, he estimated, would involve about two hundred hours spent just reading the file of each candidate being evaluated for tenure.

Frank suggested that student groups of majors might be helpful in providing feedback to the departmental personnel as well as other committees.

Putting student participation aside, faculty members have been looking closely at the tenure system and attempting to suggest constructive changes they feel should be made.

One such change deals with an effort to keep tenure decisions primarily at a campus level; it also involves calling in an outside arbitrator in times of conflict.

Norman D. Aitken, chairman of the economics department, feels that if the administration has a question about any departmental decisions that "they should come to the department and discuss the matter instead of asking for one or two department representatives to come to them and justify the case."

Protest at S.U. today

There will be a demonstration today on the steps of the Student Union Building at 1:30 to protest further military action in Cambodia.

The organizers of the protest feel that President Ford will use the seizure of the Mayaguez as a show of strength to "weaken the new Cambodian society" which would re-open the Southeast Asian war.

According to a spokesperson for the group "the contact rep (to the seizure) cannot be for this country to unleash more bombs, more death and more war."

TM kills pot decriminalization

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

A recommendation to the state legislature which would propose the decriminalization of "co-habitation and the possession of marijuana for personal use" was narrowly defeated at last night's Amherst Town Meeting.

The proposal, said these "victimless" crimes should not be enforced, was defeated by a vote of 90-87. The article was sponsored by Floyd Baily, coordinator of Progressive Candidates Pool.

Town Council member Phillip Sellinger said these "victimless" crimes are "selective, inequitable, and intimidating."

Sellinger said, "Twenty four million Americans abuse marijuana. Should 24 million people be prosecuted? Then the laws would be more equitable."

Co-habitation, he added, is discriminatory against those people who want to share the same living quarters.

Also defeated was an article which would urge the Amherst Chief of Police not to approve "any firearms or ammunition that is likely to result in a higher risk of aggravated injury or death than is necessary to acquire lawful policy."

The prohibited ammunition would include those bullets which are irregularly shaped, such as "dum-dum" bullets, those which expand or flatten easily in the human body, bullets filled with glass or "any substance that would unnecessarily inflame the wound," and bullets with scored surfaces or filed off ends.

Adam Auster, an Amherst voter in favor of the bill, said the Amherst police force uses bullets which "mushroom and expand."

Auster also said, "There is a $10 million suit in Boston because a man was paralysed by a 'dum-dum' bullet. The argument against the bullet is that it violates the person's right to be tried before being executed."

There is an advantage to these bullets, he added . They tend to fragment and splatter when they ricochet, so they are not as dangerous to other people.

Ruster said, "This could also be done by slowing down the muzzle. If the bullet does not ricochet, and hits straight on, the bullets would obviously be more dangerous."

An attempt to strike the by-law outlawing "loafing" in Amherst was referred to the town selectmen for research.

Eric Walgren, a Town Council member, said the Massachusetts Supreme Court legalized "loitering" 25 years ago.

Walgren said, "Black's Legal Dictionary defines loiter as 'to spend time idlely.' Loaf means 'to spend time in idleness.' Apparently these are two words for the same thing."

The Town Selectmen will also research other by-laws, including the legality of blowing up balloons and sliding on the sidewalks in Amherst commons.

Several articles were passed at the town meeting:

—To raise $5,000 to establish a nutrition program for the elderly residents of the Town of Amherst effective July 1.

—To raise $15,000 to construct new sidewalks and bike paths or combination "bi-walks" on various streets.

—To establish a permanent Committee on Public Transportation.

—To amend the by-laws to establish a Cable Advisory Committee.

A proposal which would prohibit the search of a suspect's rectum was defeated last night.

Interest on deposits subject of class suit

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

The class action charging UMass with failure to pay interest on dorm security deposits was filed Tuesday in Hampshire County Superior Court in Northampton.

Under a 1972 consumer protection law, landlords are required to pay a five per cent annual interest on security deposits. The University, according to Attorney Thomas Lesser who represents the six student plaintiffs, could be assessed for more than $150,000 if the charge holds up in court.

The suit also alleges that the $100 and $50 deposits have not been returned to dorm residents within the 30 day legal deadline. Lesser said he could not put a figure on what this might cost the University at this time. Tenants can demand a refund of double the original deposit if the landlord fails to comply, according to the law.

The consumer protection laws cited by the suit apply only to landlords. Lesser said in a recent interview that the University might claim they do not fit this category. He said, "They (UMass) certainly act like landlords."

Lesser said that civil actions ordinarily are delayed in Hampshire because of backlog. But consumer actions take precedence, he said, and the case should be heard by November.

The six students, who brought the suit on behalf of all those similarly affected are Lyn Anne Washburn, Mark Levitan, Ellen Carcciolo, Ellen Gavin, Henry Doyle and Gary Goldman.

SWA axes proposed budget

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Southwest Assembly voted recently to allocate $17,330 to various Southwest centers, $5,400 less than was recommended by the centers, according to Peggy Powell, SWA communications coordinator.

Two centers that experienced fund cuts for next year were the Center for Racial Understanding, chopped of $2,000, and single course fees of the Academic pool were cut in half. No centers were allowed increases in funding.

In its last and longest meeting of the academic year, SWA also voted to form a Hampden Student Center Governing Board. At last week's SWA meeting, the assembly voted to install student facilities in Hampden Center and it would be the duty of the governing board to "coordinate, negotiate and supervise," the installations, Craig Sanderson said, assembly member.

A bill to allocate $500 to defray administrative, printing and travel costs of the Student Action Committee was defeated by the assembly on a voice vote. The bill was proposed by assembly member Brian Harrington and it was defeated because "it was argued that the Student Senate had recently allocated $500 to SAC," Powell said.

In other action, SWA passed a bill to set up a SWA academic affairs committee next semester. It was also resolved to give the Executive Committee of SWA decision-making power over the summer vacation. This bill was proposed by SWA President Gary Lewis and was passed on a voice vote.

Collective bargaining vote seems likely

Faculty decision pending on bargaining vote

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

Nearly fifty percent of the UMass Amherst faculty has authorized the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) to call for an election that will allow faculty members to determine whether they want to be represented by a collective bargaining agent, according to MSP President Joseph Frank.

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP), MSP's opposition on campus, expects to gain the necessary ten percent response in order to present faculty members with an alternative to MSP on the ballot.

MSP collected approximately 49 percent of the authorization and designation (A andD) cards they handed out from about one-half of the faculty, professional librarians and department heads and chairpersons. The Massachusetts State Labor Relations Board (MSLRB) requires that 50 percent of the faculty sign A and D cards before a collective bargaining election is held.

Frank said he expected to receive more than the necessary 50 percent by the end of the week. Compating this year's unionization drive with the one held in november 1973, Frank said, "We will have more than the total number of cards that came in two years ago when they received over 500 votes."

Anthony M. Gawienowski, newly elected president of the UMass chapter of the AAUP, said that Monday's results of an AAUP poll showed that close to 50 percent of its members want the AAUP executive committee to oppose MSP on the ballot.

Both Frank and Gawienowski predict that their group will be elected as the collective bargaining agent representing faculty on campus here next fall.

According to Gawienowski, the main difference between MSP and AAUP is that MSP is affiliated with the National Education Association which covers many areas of education while AAUP is exclusively involved with problems related to colleges and universities.

Ed Kelly, head of building operations in the SU-CC complex, talking with SAC members around noon yesterday, concerning keeping the "IZATION" in the Student Union sign. It was later decided that the sign will remain as is until June, when construction on the front of the building will commence.

The MSLRB will begin to certify the A and D cards handed in by MSP Tuesday. A preliminary hearing will then be held in June by the MSLRB to discuss the date of a collective bargaining election and who will be eligible to vote.

"If all goes smoothly," said Frank, "a collective bargaining election will probably be held in November at the UMass Amherst campus."

Frank pointed out that the UMass Amherst unionization drive is completely independent from the one taking place at the Boston campus.

The administration, in the 1973 election, challenged the eligibility of department heads and chairpersons to vote on the grounds that they were administrators rather than faculty members. Frank said that if the challenge is repeated this year that MSP will strongly advocate that people in question be allowed to vote.

He pointed out that there may be a problem defining which part-time faculty members will be eligible to vote. However, the MSLRB will ultimately determine who is eligible to vote unless a satisfactory compromise can be arranged between MSP and the administration.

All voting procedures, including election by secret ballot, will be handled by the MSLRB.

Frank said there will be a series of open meetings in the fall, which he hopes will be a "real participatory democracy", to define issues and stands which MSP will take at a negotiating table. The summer will be used by MSP members to prepare for these meetings.

Laos protestors seize US building, hostages

Demonstrators attack information office

VIENTIANE [UPI] — Demonstrators seized U.S. government buildings in two Laotian cities yesterday and held three American hostages, including the senior U.S. official in central Laos, U.S. and Laotian sources reported.

The sources here said the student-led demonstrators raided U.S. Information Service and AID buildings in the royal capital of Luang Prabang and the central Laos community of Savannakhet.

Shouting "U.S. AID go home," the demonstrators rampaged through the buildings, damaging them and taking hostages, the sources said. They were reported still holding the buildings in Savannakhet.

The demonstrators were holding three Americans — including Sanford J. Stone, the senior American official in central Laos — at the province governor's residence in Savannakhet, the sources said. They said other Americans in Savannakhet were apparently in their homes while all Americans in Luang Prabang had been evacuated by air to Vientiane.

In Washington, the State Department said it was "concerned" about the safety of Americans in Laos and has ordered a reduction in the U.S. Embassy staff. Spokesman Robert L. Funseth said the staff reduction would begin later this week, "if in fact it has not begun already."

Funseth said there were approximately 1,000 Americans in Laos including 320 officials, 150 non-officials and at least 500 dependents.

Student leaders said as many as 1,000 persons were involved in the Luang Prabang demonstrations.

It was the second anti-American outbreak within a week in Laos. Last Friday more than 1,000 Laotians marched on the U.S. Embassy in Vientiane, hurling rocks and demanding the departure of American organizations from the country.

Luang Prabang is located about 125 miles north of Vientiane and Savannakhet is about 200 miles southeast of Vientiane.

The new demonstrations broke out as U.S. officials were putting into effect a "thinning out" of Americans in Laos. Also under consideration was a halt of operations in outlying towns because of the continued unsettled security situation and the passing of most control over events in Laos to the Communist Pathet Lao.

The neutralist premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma, was holding a cabinet session that observers were watching for indications of what strategy the Communists are likely to follow in completing their seizure of the coalition government.

The demonstrations in Savannakhet started Tuesday, according to the sources, when students seized rice from warehouses and put it on sale at about half the price charged by dealers since inflation has sent prices soaring in Laos.

Thailand protests arrival of US Marines; demands immediate withdrawal of troops

BANGKOK [UPI] — Thailand formally protested to the United States yesterday against the arrival of U.S. marine reinforcements in connection with the Cambodian seizure of an unarmed American freighter. it demanded the marines be withdrawn immediately.

The reported sinking of three Cambodian gunboats by U.S. warplanes caused less of a furor than the unexpected arrival of 1,100 marines on Thai soil.

"At the moment our reaction won't be drastic, because we consider it a retaliatory action," said an official in the prime minister's office.

"But if the Marines do anything it might be different."

A State Department spokesman in Washington declined to answer questions regarding the Thai protest. He would say only "we are in diplomatic contact with our embassy in Bangkok on this question."

American sources described the confrontation as a low point in U.S.-Thai relations in the post World War II era.

New U.S. Ambassador Charles Whitehouse arrived in Bangkok shortly after the protest was filed and was greeted by a small crowd of anti-American demonstrators at the airport with signs proclaiming, "Bastard Ford, get your troops out:" and "U.S. Go Home!"

It was evident that a major diplomatic crisis was brewing between the United States and Thailand, the last U.S. ally in Southeast Asia, over arrival of the marines without advance notice to the Thai government of Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj.

The Marines began arriving in the early morning hours on U.S. Air Force C141 troop transports. By the end of the day, more than 1,100 had arrived at U Tapao air base on the Gulf of Siam, only about 100 miles from the border with Cambodia.

The Marines were reportedly flown to Thailand in case they might be needed in any U.S. military action to recover the American ship Mayagues and its 39 crewmembers, sources here said.

Prime Minister Kukrit, who angrily denounced the movement of Marines into Thailand as a "violation of commitments," said after he delivered the formal protest note to U.S. Charge d'Affaires Edward Masters that he understood the United States might withdraw the troops after the protest is received in Washington.

"This is not certain," he said. "But we will wait until tomorrow before we take any more action."

American sources said the Marines remained at U Tapao but that should there be a decision to remove them from Thailand, they could be airlifted to the USS Coral Sea, an aircraft carrier now steaming in the Gulf of Siam.

It was understood here that the diplomatic crisis over the Marines was caused by the fact that Washington had not first consulted with the Thai government. It was understood that the U.S. embassy also had not been informed and that Masters told Kukrit Tuesday that the United States would not send additional troops here.

Stans fined $5000 for money violations

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans, chief fundraiser for Richard M. Nixon in 1968 and 1972, was fined the maximum $5,000 yesterday on a five-count campaign finance misdemeanor.

U.S. District Judge John Lewis Smith spared Stans a jail sentence, saying "the ends of justice and the public interest would be best served by the imposition of a monetary penalty."

Stans, 67, could have received as much as five years in prison.

"I believe I have been fully exonerated of any improper activities in Watergate and its aftermath," Stans told reporters afterward. "These are technical matters on which I have appeared and I believe I have vindicated my plea to the Senate Watergate committee in 1973 to give me back my good name."

Then, refusing to answer questions, he shouldered his way past photographers and reporters.

Stans pleaded guilty March 12 of failing to register details of a $30,000 contribution from former Philippine Ambassador Ernesto Lagdameo in 1972; failing to register details of a $31,000 allocation to Frederick C. LaRue, a Nixon re-election aide, also in 1972; failing to register details of a $33,000 contribution from former Montana Gov. Tim Babcock between Nov. 3, 1972, and Jan. 17, 1973; receiving a $40,000 contribution in illegal corporate funds from Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. in 1972; and receiving a $30,000 contribution in illegal corporate funds from 3M Company in 1972.

"I want to assure your honor I did not intentionally violate any laws," said Stans, standing before the judge with his hands at his sides.

Congress acts on refugees

WASHINGTON [AP] — Congress speeded action yesterday on legislation to provide funds for resettlement of Indochinese refugees in the United States.

The objective was quick passage of both authorization and appropriation bills in the House and Senate.

The Senate Democratic Policy Committee, in a morning meeting, directed expedited action by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The House has already been scheduled to vote on a $405-million appropriation.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, said the speedup in the Senate responded to administration pleas of urgency.

Womens rights bill passes legislature

BOSTON [UPI] — A state constitutional amendment guaranteeing equal status for women was approved overwhelmingly yesterday by a joint session of the Massachusetts Legislature, and ordered put on the 1976 ballot.

Approval of the state Equal Rights Amendment came on a 217-55 roll call after two hours of heated debate during which opponents charged it would wreak havoc with more than 300 state laws.

However, the majority of the House and Senate followed the lead of Senate Majority Whip Mary L. Fonseca, D-Fall River, whose first speech as a freshman lawmaker in 1953 was made in overturning a state law prohibiting women teachers from retaining their jobs after marriage.

"It's taken us 23 years," she said, "and I feel firmly that there are women who are being discriminated against."

Even those opposed to the amendment did not argue the issue of discrimination against women. They maintained where discrimination occurred, adequate state and federal stafeguards were already available to protect minority rights.

A preview of the final outcome came early on during the debate when the Constitutional Convention defeated on a 175-97 roll call, a motion to postpone a final vote on the amendment until next year, pending completion of a study to determine how many state laws would have to be changed to comply.

Massachusetts ratified the controversial federal Equal Rights Amendment in 1973. The state ERA, which gained initial state Constitutional Convention the same year, will not effect the amendment to the federal constitution, which has yet to be ratified.

"That 1973 vote ratifying the federal Equal Rights Amendment was a mistake," said Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston. "We're talking about government-funded abortion that could come as a result of this."

Judiciary Committee Senate Chairman John J. Conte, D-Worcester, moved the postponement. He charged there were some 300 statutes which would have to be amended if the ERA amendment were adopted by voters in referendum next year.

"One of the last steps opponents to a piece of legislation take is to try to postpone a ovte on it in hopes of eventually killing it," said a master of the art, Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelley, Jr., D-Oxford.

A visitors gallery packed by some 300 obvious, though silent backers — viewed the debate.

State taxation committee rejects Dukakis gas, cigarette tax hikes

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' program to bail the state out of its financial crisis suffered a major setback yesterday as a legislative committee rejected his tax program.

The Taxation Committee voted 10-4 to oppose Dukakis' plan for a five-cent-a-pack cigarette tax increase and a four-cents-a-gallon hike in the gasoline tax.

The proposed taxes would raise some $130 million to pay interest and principal on $450 million of borrowing needed to pay state bills before the fiscal year ends June 30.

Rep. Vincent J. Piro, D-Somerville, House chairman of the Taxation Committee, said the governor's plan would be sent directly to the House floor and then possibly to the Ways and Means Committee.

Piro said the committee refused to follow the advice of its Senate chairman, Sen. Frederick W. Schlosstein Jr., D-Warren, who wanted the committee to send the measure to the Ways and Means panel without taking a vote.

"If we did that, the tax bill would have become the legislature's tax bill and not the governor's," Piro said.

Piro also said the governor's office was informed of the vote and that Dukakis will meet with the legislative committee today.

According to committee sources, legislators were critical of the governor for failing to consult with members and for waiting so long to make his tax proposal.

The legislation for the $450 million in borrowing is pending in the House Ways and Means panel to approve the bonding plan.

The governor and the other officials said the state is about to run out of money for its bills.

Busing foes ordered to tell information

BOSTON [UPI] — Two vocal opponents of a plan to integrate Boston's schools yesterday were ordered to tell what they know about efforts to obstruct the process.

"The court cannot discharge its responsibility without doing everything it can to prevent planned disruption," said U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity, who ordered the controversial plan.

Garrity directed depositions be taken from Mrs. Rita Graul and Mrs. Virginia Sheehy, leaders of the South Boston Information Center. However, he declined to make the two women defendants in case, as had been requested by the black parents who brought the integration suit.

South Boston has been the center of opposition to the current interim desegregation plan, which has resulted in frequent racial clashes.

Last weekend Garrity ordered a final integration plan calling for the busing of more than one-quarter of the city's students starting next September.

Relief funds drop

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts will run out of welfare cash by May 27, the legislature's Ways and Means Committee was told yesterday.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, state Treasurer Robert Q. Crane and Welfare Commissioner Jerald L. Stevens all urged the committee to approve the governor's borrowing and tax plan.

The program involves increases in the cigarette and gasoline taxes to repay $450 million of bonds needed to pay bills before the fiscal year ends June 30.

Even before then — May 26 or 27 — Stevens said, cash will run out for welfare payments.

Mideast fighting up

By United Press International

Israeli soldiers traded artillery fire with Lebanese gunners yesterday in the third day of border clases. Beirut said Israeli patrols crossed into southern Lebanon but were driven off without accomplishing their objectives.

The fighting broke out as Israeli officials said they were watching closely Jordanian armor and troop movements on the country's easter frontier and that the arm was prepared for any eventuality.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, ending two days of talks with Kuwaiti leaders, said the United States had the power to force an immediate solution of the Middle East problem as "Israel's life depends on America."

Turning the last page

By CHRIS DILLARD and MDC STAFF

This is it.

Regardless of choice, we are being thrust out of the womb.

For undergraduates, the annual question is "What are you going to do this summer?" For seniors, the question is "What are you going to do when you graduate?"

Jobs? Inconceivable to many, but the cherished ideal for all.

Graduation is inconceivable. But sooner or later, it becomes a finite awareness of what inevitably has to come to pass.

It's a final resignation. Another chapter ended not with a bang but simply with a period. It's called senioritis.

Senioritis makes alcoholics of teetotalers. Either you drink to celebrate, or you drink to drown your sorrow. The end is the same.

Leaving is many things besides tearful goodbyes. For one, it is cutthroat battles for southwest elevators to remove carloads of America's material best. It is also filling address books with people you know you'll never seen again. In itself, that's the hardest battle of all.

The end is symbolized in so many ways. First, "This is the last time I preregister!" Then, it's "The my last mid term!" Lately, it's "My last term project."

Now, it's "My last final exam."

In comparison to the other problems confronting the world, the problems before seniors are minor at best.

Consider that Americans took over an island in Cambodia ... It could be May 1970.

Instead, it's May 1975.

So it goes.

Chris Dillard and Steve DeCosta are graduating seniors.

tenure Comments ...

The story on the tenure cases in Economics in the Monday Collegian contained comments from Professor Holesovsky of the Economics Department which were critical of Professor Michael Best's qualifications for tenure and the decision to award him tenure. I believe these remarks were inappropriate. There is a general consensus in the Economics Department that Professor Best has an excellent teaching record. Professor Best was recommended for tenure by the Department Personnel Committee, by me as Chairman, by the Executive Committee of the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences and by Dean Alfange. Consequently I believe that the decision of the University Administration to award Professor Best tenure was correct since the decision was consistent with the recommendations of the Economics Department and the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

The real issue about which there are now strong feelings in the Department of Economics is the decision of former Vice-Chancellor Gluckstern not to recommend Professors Che Tsao and Arthur Wright for tenure. Both of these faculty members were also recommended for tenure by the appropriate bodies in the Economics Department and the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences. The Economics Department has recently presented Chancellor Bromery with new information which further documents the merits of both of these cases. It is my hope that after a careful review of the new information, Chancellor Bromery will decided to support the department's recommendations for tenure.

Norman D. Aitken, Chairman
Department of Economics

Blood drive thanks

Last week the Red Cross Blood Drive at the University of Massachusetts collected a total of 1373 pints. This is a record volume, and those who made it possible, donors and workers alike, can take pride in the fact that they have contributed generously and unselfishly to one of the great and continuing needs of our society.

We would like to thank the senior citizens and members of the Junior Women's Club who made the sandwiches and ran the canteen; the members of the University Women who took care of publicity, registration, reception and other clerical duties, as as acting as donor aides and canteen helpers; ROTC students and members of Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega who worked before during the drive; and the student nurses, volunteer nurses, doctors and Red Cross personnel. Most importantly, we wish to thank each and every donor; it was their response, after all, that made this community endeavor such a success.

Dorothy N. Swanson
Blood Drive Chairman for University Women

...and a reply

I think I understand why my comments should have given rise to a misunderstanding. I agree with Professor Aitken's second paragraph fully. Otherwise the point I was trying to make is simply this: Given the comparative quality and quantity of credentials in the three tenure cases, it would be a scandalous case of injustice if only Professor Best received tenure, and Professors Tsao and Wright did not. This is independent of what I or anyone else may thing of Professor Best's merits measured against some absolute scale and in isolation. Saying this I should add that I am speaking for a number of my colleagues and students acquainted with the cases in question.

More march info

The most recent experience with the state legislature and administration has taught us a lot about the political priorities of our politicians. It is important that we see this attack on education and our democratic rights in an overall context. This past year, we witnessed and continue to witness a massive anti-bussing campaign in Boston supported on both the local and national level. This campaign of blatant racism is hiding behind the smokescreen of bussing. We see this when there is no public outcry against the onslaught of KKK forces into the area; we see this when Wallace's American Party can seep thousands of votes in the election. [The same Wallace who declared last week: "Our true foreign policy in those years [WWII] ought to have been cultivating the friendship of the Japanese and Germans instead of being antagonistic."]

The anti-bussing campaign has caused $1 million in Federal monies to be withheld for all new educational materials. It has prevented a unified fight for quality education. With Mass. having an unemployment rate of 17 per cent with youth employment of 47 per cent in Roxbury and 30 per cent in South Boston, the anti-bussing forces have chosen to promote racism rather than demand jobs. That while inflation soars, the state has decided on a fiscal austerity program that will hit social services and public education the hardest. We must see our struggle for quality education and no budget cutbacks on this campus in the context of people's struggle across the state. An attack on Black children's right to quality education is both a racist attack and an attack on all democratic rights. Saturday, May 17 there will be a nationwide demonstration for quality desegregated education called by the NAACP. Let us unite in support of bussing, in demanding an end to youth unemployment and an end to educational and social welfare cutbacks. Buses will leave for the demonstration Saturday morning from Whitmore, but people must have reservations, call immediately, 546-6618 or 546-9791.

Continue the effort!!

Hey all of your participants in the MORATORIUM and student lobbying effort at the statehouse. Your job isn't finished. It's just begun! All of those bills concerning tuition increases and budget cuts will be acted upon by the legislature while we are away for the summer. Don't let them catch you being unaware. We did have an impact, and we must continue to make our needs known to those who hold power and consequently have an enormous effect on our futures.

Go see your legislator! If you are unable to go personally be sure to write [State House, Boston, Mass. 02133] and-or telephone [Senators: 617-727-2455, Representatives: 617-727-2424]. The most pressing issues are:

I. Budget cuts for state higher education — House bill number 1.

2. Bills concerning your tuition — House bill number 5144, House bill number 2441 and Senate bill number 469.

The only way to have influence over your legislator is to let him-her know how you feel. Keep these issues alive by enlisting the help of parents, friends and neighbors.

If you'll be in the Amherst area this summer stop by U.S.C. in the Student Union Bldg. room 413. If you would like more information on effective lobbying tips please call before you leave Amherst, at 545-0217 and speak to Sandra Burkett or any U.S.C.C. member.

Buses for march

On Saturday, March 17, there will be a massive march for desegregation in Boston. We are organizing a UMass contingent to leave from Amherst Saturday morning to participate in the March.

The march for desegregation on May 17th called by the NAACP offers us an historical opportunity to show that we the youth know that attacks by ROAR and company are meant to divide Asian, Black, Chicano, Native American, Puerto Rican and white young men and women from a united struggle for a future of quality integrated education and meaningful jobs and lives.

The anti-bussers aren't opposed to buses. They are using the busing issue as a smokescreen which tries to give legitimacy to their racism. Black students are given the poorest of educations and because of this, Black youth are left with the grimmest of futures. Ultimately racism jeopardizes the future of all youth.

The attacks on affirmative action and other social programs aren't just attacks on Black youth.

— Witness the cutbacks on aid to veterans, mothers, the unemployed, the aged with billions spent daily on war.

— Witness the cutbacks in special educational and financial aid programs for all students while tuition climbs.

The bus for Boston will cost approximately three dollars per person. If you are interested in participating call Paul — 546-6618, Buffy — 546-9719, or Bonnie — 546-9787, by Thursday if possible.

Promises, promises

In the year I've spent at UMass I have been anxiously waiting to see if many of the rumors I have heard about UMieland are true.

That's right, we UMies are famous — or rather notorious — at the other state schools.

After having spent two years at another state school, and having friends at almost every state school in the system, I have heard just about every myth (fact or fallacy) about UMass.

1. UMass is a zoo. This is one of the most common myths other students believe about UMass. From the co-ed towers in Southwest to the non co-ed dorms in Northeast it's all a zoo. No one is exactly sure what is meant by a zoo. However, there is a vague idea that a zoo includes free sex, plenty of drugs, and twenty-four hour a day parties.

2. The food at the dining commons is delicious.

I'll never forgive the darling who gave me this impression. You can imagine my surprise when I tasted the slop.

3. At least 90 per cent of the UMass students are junkies.

Don't go to UMass I was warned, everyone who goes there becomes a junkie.

Where in the town of Amherst does one find enough stuff to feed 17,000 hard core addicts? So much for details.

4. You can't walk around at night at UMass, there are at least three rapes a night and several murders a semester. Although I have walked alone in the early hours of the morning and have yet to be molested my friends still protest the validity of this rumor.

5. UMass students never go to classes or study but get high grades, anyway. You can decide yourself if this myth has any truthful basis.

6. There'll be at least 1,000 streakers running across campus in broad daylight. Well, though I missed last year's busy season, I have seen a few, but the bashful boys dared only to venture out at night.

7. You can get credits for anything at UMass. I was even told two people of the opposite sex could get a credit for living together.

8. Every dorm has a twenty-four hour a day party. Where are they all? So much for promises!

9. The shuttle system at UMass is excellent. This is another unforgiveable myth. This person has obviously never been at the Southwest bus stop on a cold February day. You can wait thirty minutes for an overfilled bus.

Many of these myths sound good. Not that I'm complaining, but where is the UMass they promised me? Despite these disappointments I have become fond of this place in the year I've been here. Because as they say -- If UMass is a zoo then I'm a monkey because I love it here.

Until next year, farewell...

The Mayaguez connections

Cambodia's last ditch effort to exert its military strength reminds one of the lost Japanese soldier who nobody had told about the end of the war.

The very thought of piracy on the part of Cambodia against the United States is almost comical. As Hubert Humphrey said, the entire Cambodian navy could possibly fit into a Minnesota lake.

There are waves of discontent brewing on some local college campuses though. Hampshire College is planning to have a demonstration, and one of the persons who brought us the budget demonstration just left the office saying that UMass may follow suit.

I can't help but be cynical about such action which has been done for the sake of doing it, without any real awareness of the political situation involved. If Gerald Ford can reclaim the Mayaguez without getting further involved in Cambodia, he will be the first American president to successfully come out of a confrontation of this type since Kennedy and the Cuban Missile Crisis.

If the ship was in violation of territorial waters and if the ship was carrying artillery or intelligence equipment, the path of action should be different. However, no dispatch has come out of Cambodia at this time to that effect, which makes this unlike the seizure of the Pueblo. Any action the part of the United States had to be calculated, due to the unusual political nature of the countries involved.

On the other hand, if the ship was innocent of carrying weapons and was simply on a cargo mission, President Ford took the right course of action.

The Cambodian seizure of one of our merchant vessels now seems a clear act of piracy and the lives of our men are at stake as long as they are in the custody of armed Cambodians. It would be unfair, since the negotiations failed, to allow the American merchants to stay on the Cambodian mainland.

Fearing that this may develop into another Vietnam is foolish. This is a naval controntation. There are no signs that China or Russia are in support of the Cambodians, and the Cambodian navy doesn't have the power to fend off the American Cup Team.

So I watch as people demonstrate against the the reclaiming of an American merchant ship on the grounds that peoples' lives are at stake, I only ask what importance these people place on the lives of the American merchants (not soliders) who may have already been lost.

But the question remains: Was the Mayaguez innocently transporting cargo? Or is this a repeat of the past, in the same light as the Lusitania and the Pueblo?

And if this is the case we may not know the answer for decades to come.

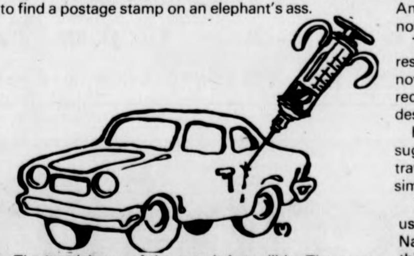
Gasoline junkies

"Automobiles and petroleum determine the political composition of our government and the chemical composition of the atmosphere."

The U.S. has developed into a petroleum-automobile complex. Henry Ford, cars, gasoline, taxes, roads; more cars, gasoline, taxes, Dukakis, roads, Gerry Ford. The chicken and the egg seem to have appeared together.

It seemed fitting that the final installment of "Commentary on Energy" be devoted to the junkie addiction of the American economy to automobiles and gasoline. Last week Fortune magazine issued a listing of the top 500 companies in the U.S. Of the top 20 corporations, 14 were directly related to the production of cars or the marketing of gasoline. Furthermore, no matter how much rhetoric environmentalists wish to inject into the debate over the desirability of the car, one in six Americans depend upon it for income.

Fact one: on the average American drivers spend 1-½ months of eight hour days behind the wheel each year. Fact two: during the height of the energy crisis, Dick Nixon, formerly of Washington, D.C., and now residing in San Clemente, prepared his fiscal 1975 budget by allocating three times as much money to the construction of highways as he delegated to mass transit systems for the same period. Fact three, finding a mass transit system in most cities is like trying to find a postage stamp on an elephant's ass.



The inefficiency of the auto is incredible. The same highway lane that carries 3,000 people by car could move 42,000 by train or 60,000 by bus. It also clogs our cities to a point of near strangulation; streets and garages occupy 40 per cent of their area.

Gregg Wilson is Collegian Energy Czar.

But the solution is not simple. After all "what's good for General Motors is good for the U.S." To get rid of this great American phalic would send the economy into a much faster nosedive than it is presently experiencing.

The car has also created a dependence in other areas. It has resulted in the significant increase in the amount of miles we must now travel to and from work, home, school, shopping centers and recreational facilities. The emergence of the suburban mall destroyed the old practice of walking to the store.

How could we begin to solve this problem. Some have suggested the selective destruction of certain highways. Motorists travelling to and from Boston during the rush hour have echoed a similar sentiment concerning the Southeast Expressway.

Yet solutions cannot be approached in a comical manner. All of us would do well to seriously re-examine our travelling patterns. Nationally over half of all car trips are under three miles. Certainly this is not too great a distance for everyone to consider walking. It would also continue to decrease the market demand for cars, forcing the automakers to change production, or fold. A lesson that Chrysler is learning too late.

Better still dive your car right into the Charles. Your pocketbook and future generations will thank you for it.

The Summer in France program at the Academy, July 1st-August 4th, provides studies for credit (up to six transferable credits) in the fields of French, painting, art history, sculpture, music, dance (ballet, modern, and jazz), theater, photography, cinema, and cuisine. Tuition, $685, includes course of study, lodgings (double occupancy), various cultural tours and excursions.

For an additional $225, the week of August 4th-14th is spent on the French Riviera attending the Festival of Music and Arts at Monte-Carlo, Menton, Nice, Saint-Paul-de-Vence, and Fondation Maeght. The charge covers transportation, lodgings and meals in luxury hotels and reserved seats at the festivals.

If you desire further information, contact Richard Jones, dance instructor at UMass and professor in residence at the Academy's summer program, office: 545-2413 or home: 549-6935.

★ faculty eye tenure

Aitken suggested the possibility of calling in an outside arbitrator, acceptable to both faculty and administration, in cases where there is a great difference between the recommendations of the dean and the department, on the one hand, and those of the administration on the other.

Frank, also president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) agrees with Aitken about the use of outside arbitration when there are conflicts. Feeling strongly that the final decision-making power should be at the campus level, Frank advocates limiting the power of the president and the Board of Trustees to override tenure decisions.

Spielman suggests that "institutional need" be determined and tenure qualifications be assessed at the time of appointment. He feels that "institutional need" should be considered as a factor before filling a faculty vacancy rather than waiting until a faculty member has been here for six years, and then assessing his "institutional need" to the University.

The 70-year old retirement law has drawn some criticism, and some suggestions have been made as to how to change it.

Kenneth G. Picha, dean of the school of engineering, expressed dissatisfaction with the law. "I've been plugging for a second career option where a person could retire at 55 with half salary and be able to enter a second career, particularly if that person hasn't been receiving merit increases for ten years." He said that this second point of decision-making in a faculty member's careers should be one "involving dignity, a graceful retirement, and possibly a second career."

"I think that would be one of the greatest things that could happen at this University," he added. Picha said former Provost Gluckstern has been looking into this suggestion.

Frank agrees with Picha in that he would also like to see a change in the retirement rules. He feels the lowering of the retirement age would be beneficial in that it would allow faculty to retire younger on a part-time basis without an undue loss of income.

In Frank's view, the result of this change would be to "create more vacancies so that deserving younger faculty members will not have to be denied tenure." Said Frank, "I'd rather see retirement changed than tenure denied. It would save the University money because the higher you are (in the tenure system), the more money you make."

It would be very difficult indeed to create a system of tenure evaluation that would suit students, faculty, and administrators. Discussion and constructive criticism on the part of all three groups is perhaps the only way that may lead to positive change.

A large turnout of UMass students and friends is expected at the Benefit Concert for The American Society to be held at The Southwest Horseshoe tomorrow. The benefit is scheduled to begin at twelve noon and continue until one a.m.

Bruce Wingate, concert coordinator, has arranged for one-hundred-and-fifty kegs of beer and six bands to provide the entertainment. Those bands appearing include Rush, The Allen Fuller Band, Forest, Overnight Sensation, and Mad Angel.

Wingate projects that proceeds will be near three thousand dollars.

Medical records kept confidential

As graduation approaches, an additional concern for many students, aside from their own personal futures, is the future of the health records that have accumulated at the University Health Center.

First, the University Health Services is licensed as a hospital. Under Massachusetts State Law (GL Ch. 111, Sec. 70), a hospital must keep a patient's records for 30 years after the last treatment, and then the records may be destroyed. After graduation, a student's medical record is pulled from the active files and stored in locked areas. The Health Services is presently considering a microfilm system for records of graduated students.

The same rules regarding confidentiality of active records apply to records of former students. No one outside the Health Services may have access to these files, and no one may be given information from them without prior written consent of the particular student involved. There are no exceptions to this policy — no one, whether parents, University faculty, or prospective employer has access to an individual's file without that person's consent. Similarly, for job or school applications, a certificate of good health may be issued at the student's request.

Parking applications due

Applications for Renew or Change in present lot assignment must be turned into the Parking Office, Rm. 1, Munson Hall, by tomorrow.

Subcommittee 'no evidence pot users move on'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Most witnesses told a Senate subcommittee considering elimination of criminal penalties for personal use of marijuana yesterday that there is no evidence to indicate pot users move on to hard drugs.

But Donald E. Miller, chief counsel of the Drug Enforcement Administration DEA, disagreed.

Four of the five witnesses appearing before Sen. Birch Bayh's hearings on marijuana penalties said there is no link between marijuana and the use of drugs such as heroin, cocaine, speed or barbituates. But Miller said a marijuana user "is aligning himself with a subculture where all drugs are used" and therefore is encouraged to use hard drugs.

"By far the largest majority of heroin users first started on marijuana," Miller said in a spirited exchange with R. Keith Stroup, director of a group called NORML which seeks reform of marijuana laws. "Now Mr. Stroup would say they first started on milk."

"That's not true," Stroup shot back. "I'd say the first drug they started on was alcohol. I wish you'd stop saying that. That's the big lie put out by the Bureau of Narcotics."

Miller said the Justice Department feels the bill is "poorly drafted" and would be unenforceable, but he deleted a portion of his statement that said the department opposed removing criminal penalties. He later said it is still "an open matter within the department."

Other witnesses said substitution of a $100 civil fine for possession and non-profit transfers of up to one ounce of marijuana is an acceptable compromise to legalization. They said it would improve respect for the law, free more officers to fight violent crime and would not significantly increase the number of marijuana smokers.

"There is a greater rapport between law enforcement agents and the young people of our state than ever before," said Pat Horton, district attorney of Lane County, Ore. Oregon has adopted the same civil fine approach contained in the bill.

Sen. Philip Hart, D-Mich., said 13 million Americans still use marijuana despite penalties. Hart said the damage done "to the general public's judgement of the deterrent aspects."

Bayh said he was convinced decriminalization is necessary, despite the belief by some that its use is immoral. He said the "ultimate hypocrisy in our society" is expressed by harsh sentences imposed on marijuana users while drunk drivers "maybe lose their licenses."

Brandeis demonstrators reassess strike issues

WALTHAM (AP) — An estimated 100 to 125 Brandeis University students staged a brief demonstration in the lobby of the university's administration building yesterday.

The students expressed concern about three points arising from the recent student takeover and occupation of a classroom building on the campus to protest proposed budget cuts.

Yesterday, the students wanted to see President Marver H. Bernstein, who did not meet with them but issued "clarifications" on their concerns through Dean of Student Affairs Robert Sculkin. Sculkin also met with the students.

The students involved in the takeover earlier had called for the admission of more Asian students, and students yesterday asked why Bernstein had not taken up the issue with the chairman of the Faculty Committee on Admissions and Financial Aid.

A spokesman for the university said Bernstein had instructed the chairman to take up the issue in the fall. The spokesman said admissions to Brandeis for next September had been completed.

The spokesman said another concern of the students was a university memo saying that student recruiters would be hired to help recruit minority students. The students said they had not see a posting of the jobs.

The university spokesman said allocations for the jobs will be made from the 1975-76 budget, which does not go into effect until July 1.

The university spokesman said the students met for about 30 minutes in the lobby discussing the answers provided by Sculkin, and then left.

They were in the lobby less than an hour and a half, the spokesman said. Brandeis has 3,400 students.

Higher prices, adequate supplies highlight summer energy cutback

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The nation's utilities say they are in good shape for summer, with most companies reporting that they have the ability to generate more electricity than they expect customers to use.

Higher prices rather than short supplies will be the main problem this year.

Officials contacted in an Associated Press survey said Wednesday their optimism depended on continued conservation and normal weather, but added that the situation has improved from last year.

"We think we'll be in good shape this summer," said Bryan Gosling, a spokesman for the New York State power pool. "We're forecasting energy requirements for 1975 to be about 4.1 per cent above 1974," he said, adding that the system which provides virtually all the electricity used in the state has a generating capacity 10 per cent higher than it did last year.

Gosling said, "We think we have an adequate operating margin, barring contingencies like an extended period of hot weather."

Gary Reeves, information officer for Public Service Co. of Colorado had a similar view. "We expect to have about a 15 to 20 per cent reserve capacity which ought to handle any emergencies," he said.

There was concern in 1974 that there might be brownouts or blackouts because of a lack of oil to produce electricity and a shortage of generating equipment. Conservation efforts reduced the problem, however, and there were only a few forced voltage reductions, mainly in the Northeast.

Environmental restrictions and rising costs have hampered construction of generating plants and utilities say there could be trouble in future years, but the short-term situation is more encouraging.

The Virginia Electric & Power Co., for example, recently opened a generating plant able to provide 845 megawatts of electricity, giving the company a capacity of 9.258 megawatts. The extra megawatts give VEPCO an increase 10 per cent in generating capacity. The company expects a peak demand of 7,500 megawatts, compared to a 1974 peak of 6,734 megawatts.

Georgia Power Co. officials said they had a 21.5 per cent reserve capacity for this summer. "We don't expect to have trouble with outages," said Bob Rutherford. "We are concerned about our reserves for next year, but for this year, we're all right."

Rutherford said over-all electric consumption increased only half a per cent from 1973 to 1974 — well below normal growth. At peak periods, however, Georgia Power customers used 6.7 per cent more electricity last summer than they did a year earlier.

"That means that during the hottest day in the year, conservation methods are pretty well ignored and practically everyone turns on their air conditioners full blast," Rutherford said.

Rising prices are responsible for many conservation efforts. The National Utility Service Inc. said Tuesday a survey of the country's 24 largest utilities showed residential rates rose 37.5 per cent from June 1973 to December 1974.

"As utility costs continue to soar, it's clear the public really suffers twice," said Marvin Lauterbach, a spokesman for the survey organization. "First, they must directly pay the cost of increased service to their homes and apartments. Then they pay again in the form of increased prices passed along to them by suppliers of their goods and services."

Here comes the sun.. ..it's alright

By BARBARA ESTABROOK
University Health Services

It's almost time to leave books behind, and hit the beaches or poolside, or at least the backyard!

Suntanning is actually a natural process by which the skin protects itself from severe burn. The sun's rays stimulate an increase in lower epidermal layer skin cells, and these cells increase their production of melanin, a brownish pigment. The cells migrate to the surface, and both tan and protection from burn increase as cells and pigment come to the surface.

The tanning process differs for each individual, depending on the amount of melanin naturally in the skin. Dark-complected people have high levels, and so tan quickly with little risk of sunburn. Extra protection is needed for the first few exposures, however, to protect outer skin layers while the tanning process gets underway, lighter skinned people may not be able to produce enough melanin for tanning, and may only burn.

Long range effects of exposure to the sun can be detrimental. Ultraviolet rays break down the protein in skin and promote thickening and wrinkling. Excess exposure to the sun's rays can also cause skin cancer. Risk is highest in sunny regions of the world, and among fair skinned people. Exposure to the sun can lead to problems, but there are preventive measures which can be followed to minimize them.

The first few exposures to the sun should be brief, starting about 30 minutes and working up gradually to longer periods. Sun screen lotions should be used. Sunglasses are a good precaution against harm to the eyes. Lenses should cover the eyes completely, and optically ground and polished lenses (like prescription glasses) are best. Check inexpensive glasses for bubbles or streaks. Swimming doesn't offer any protection against the sun's rays.

In the event of a bad sunburn, the important thing to remember in its treatment is to keep the burn cool. Even before the burn "comes out", soak in a cool or tepid bath, or use compresses. Lotions or creams may trap heat in the skin, and do more harm than good until after the skin is cooled. If blisters occur, try to protect them from opening for several days, and don't cover with a dressing. If needed, aspirin can be taken to relieve pain.

Another problem brought on by sun and hot weather is heat-related illness such as heat stroke, when body temperature climbs 7 to 8 degrees above normal, sweat glands stop functioning properly, blood pressure drops, and the victim may become comatose. Cold compresses should be used to bring the fever down. Heat stroke is a very dangerous condition and immediate medical help is a necessity.

Less serious heat-related problems include heat exhaustion, marked by profuse sweating, giddiness, lassitude, pallor and vomiting. This should be treated like shock. The victim should lie down and rest in a cool or air-conditioned place.

Enrollment to remain stable

Applications increase

By DON AUCOIN
Staff Reporter

The number of freshmen applying to UMass will increase only slightly in the next few years, maintaining the 25,000 student level adopted by the Board of Trustees in 1972, according to a draft copy of Enrollment Planning for the Amherst Campus.

However, the report anticipates a significant increase in applications from transfer and graduate students. The report recommends increasing graduate enrollment from 17 per cent to 20 per cent of total student enrollment.

Robert J. Doolan of the admissions office said in view of the state's current economic situation, "it would be wrong to increase enrollment." Doolan said the admissions process has become much more complicated. "Eighteen years ago we did everything in one little hole. Now an application goes to a hundred different places."

The average income of an applicant has "crept up," said Doolan, but added admissions are not based on the amount of financial aid the applicant may need. "There's not a legitimate college in the country who would do that."

Spring barbecue today

While Little Fire rock band plays, 4,000 chickens will be turning over on little fires of their own in four huge barbecue pits tomorrow as UMass has its annual spring barbecue for students.

The barbecue pits will each be 35 feet long and will roast a total of 8,000 half chickens simultaneously.

Students who normally eat in the UMass dining commons may eat instead at the barbecue, which will be in the Southwest Playing Fields on the campus. Students without dining commons tickets will pay for barbecue tickets. Franklin Dining Commons will be open to accommodate students who would prefer to eat indoors.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by stella wilder

FRIDAY, MAY 16 — Born today, you are one of those exceedingly loyal individuals who will stand by his friends to the end, though it may cause you considerable pain and personal loss to do so. At the same time, however, you have a highly developed sense of justice. Though you will stick by a friend, lending him your moral support regardless of the troubles he may be experiencing, you will be the first to admit it when and if an enemy is in the right. Your sense of values and priorities will not allow you to support intellectually that which is wrong, though you may do so emtionally without a qualm.

Though you may be tempted at times to succumb to sentimentality, you are able in the end to remind yourself of the difference between sensitivity and sentimentality. You will allow yourself to feel for another, no matter how far he may have strayed from home base -- but you will not allow sentiment to make of you a wrongdoer after the fact. Careful always to look before you leap, you bring the forces of logic to bear upon your feelings every time.

Keenly intuitive and at the same time sharply analytical, you are able to meet any problem from the best of all possible vantage points -- the emtional and the intellectual. Your ability to think on your feet and to deliver those quick thoughts in words and phrasing which make them seem the product of long contemplation make you a prime candidate for a career in the public eye.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Saturday, May 17

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you can handle situations on the home front with as much delicacy and finesse as you would handle a business matter, all will end well.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Stand by your own convictions, which may be sorely tried today. Children do much to make this day memorable; encourage them to behave naturally.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Begin now to take on a wider range of activities than you are used to. You may be growing stale -- and losing interest. Avoid distractions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Be practical when considering changes. You may find that your ambitions do not match your talents. Accept opportunity suitable to your needs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An excellent day to build character. You should have a splendid opportunity to do a good deed -- perhaps several -- before day's end.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Don't waste your time regretting what might have been. Be grateful for what you have -- and encourage your family to relish the present.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you would remain calm throughout a day that seems calculated to upset you, seek out and perform some therapeutic activity in the morning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Advance your own career through some practical activity on the home front this weekend. Loved ones may cause you some heartache. Be quick to forgive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A day which could be spoiled by your inability to take oddities in stride. Don't expect everything to be "according to Hoyle."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A satisfying day with family and friends -- if you are wise enough to accept an invitation to take part in joint enterprises promising gain.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Try something new on the home front today. This is a Saturday for stretching your mind as well as for exercising your physical self.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Look outside yourself for the key to your own personal happiness. This is an excellent day for recognizing the good qualities of others.

Phi Eta Sigma surveys alumni

Excellent in public higher education is not lost.

Members of the UMass chapter of Phi Eta Sigma, the national freshmen scholastic men's honor society, have recently completed a survey on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the UMass Chapter in Amherst showing impressive achievements among initiates.

According to the UMass society advisor Louis S. Greenbaum, the chapter was able to reach 424 of 650 members initiated from 1955, the year of founding, to 1971, the class of 1974. Forty-eight per cent of the initiates surveyed replied.

Statistics compiled by chapter historian Vincent F. Shea, a UMass sophomore from Worcester, show that of 196 who completed the questionnaire, 52 were Phi Beta Kappa members; 64 were Phi Kappa Phi; 15, Sigma Xi, and 24 belonged to Tau Beta Pi, the engineering honor society.

Seven of the initiates were graduated summa cum laude; 36, magna cum laude, and 25 cum laude. Twenty-eight are continuing their education part time and 49 have published.

A majority of respondents received fellowships for graduate and post-graduate study. Among those who received military honors, one earned a Bronze Star for action in Vietnam, another three medals for service in Korea.

Seven initiates went on to attain recognition for academic achievements in chemistry, law, physics, animal science and one as an outstanding educator of America.

Three were named outstanding young men and two of these were outstanding young men of the United States.

The Phi Eta Sigma rolls are also replete with citations for public service. Thirteen members have served in organizations ranging from the Heart Association to Vista. Many served on Presidential panels, in United Nations delegations and in municipal governments.

Health Services

Same deal to be offered in summer

University Health Services will again offer prepaid health services to students during the coming summer. Services available will be the same package provided during the regular school year, including: physician, nurse practitioner, and mental health consultations, 24-hour urgent care, medications, diagnostic services such as lab and x-ray, inpatient care, consultation with orthopedic and gynecological specialists, and health education programs and consultation. Two programs initiated this past year also are included: the Dental Program provides emergency care, initial oral examination, and oral health education sessions, with additional services available on a copayment or fee-for-service basis. The Eye Care Program provides screening and emergency care. Optometric examination is available on a copayment basis. None of these services are provided by the student supplementary insurance plan except in cases of accidental injury.

The prepaid package of services covers the period from June 1 through August 31 for a $35 fee. Students who are enrolled in the summer session play a health care fee as part of their service fees. Those wishing to have coverage during the rest of the summer, June 1-23 and August 16-31, will pay a $15 fee. Care will also be available on a fee-for-service basis.

Questions regarding the summer health plan can be answered by the billing office of the University Health Services, 549-2671, Ext. 170. Order blanks will be printed in the Collegian today and tomorrow.

McKay to bolt UMass for Colorado

By TONY CHAVES

It's all over now; this year's JV baseball season and the McKay era.

Jeff McKay is leaving UMass after a very successful two year stay. His JV baseballers put together a cumulative 25-7 record.

You can always spot a winning team by their style on and off the field. Everything they do is done with confidence and the feeling that it's their right to win.

That was how the JV team has played for the last two years. In the dugout before the game all the talk was of winning. Losing wasn't even given a thought. It was almost as if the game was already won and the other team should not even show up. This was the team spirit and desire that McKay wanted his team to show.

For the freshmen and transfer students it was a little hard at first when they tried to adjust to McKay's style. It is understandable too when you consider that some of his techniques were having the players vote for their starting lineups and that they were on their own most of the time when they were hitting.

In the beginning of the year some of the players were unhappy because they weren't playing. But then most of the games early in the year were of the pitching and defense types. Later, after the hitting came around, Coach McKay was able to make substitutions freely and get everyone in the game.

This was the most important aspect of the game in McKay's view. He believed that the only reason athletics exist was to promote brotherhood and team spirit. All he asked of his players was that they give their best on the field at all times regardless of the opposition. McKay made the comparison that he would want his team to play just as hard against a kindergarten team as they would against Dartmouth and Springfield.

As McKay put it, "Winning is nice but it isn't worth a damn if you don't give 100 per cent."

From the other side, the players were in unanimous agreement as to what they thought the reason for the team's success was: Jeff McKay!

Co-captains Mike McLoughlin and John Kearney cited the fact that McKay was an easy man for the players to communicate with, an aspect that is sadly lacking on other UMass teams. Also they mentioned that McKay got his men to go all out by promoting friendly competition at each position.

In summing up the season McKay had these comments, "It has been interesting' getting a bunch of kids like them together and seeing how they react to me. I enjoyed coaching this team, we didn't have any super standouts but everyone knew when they had to pick each other up, and they did. That is what made us great". His team had a final statement about him; He was the best coach they ever played for!

Let's all remember that next year while Jeff McKay is out at the University of Colorado working on a degree in education, the team he shaped will be here playing ball the way he taught them to.

But no matter where Coach McKay goes, he'll probably always look back on this year's team and treasure the memory of Mark Wyner running the bases as if he had a piano strapped to his back.

Homer Barr— a winner

By JOHN BOCK

The first impression one gets of wrestling Coach Homer Barr is size. He stands about six foot four and goes about 240. When he hits you with that down home handshake you get the idea that he might have done some wrestling where along the line. If you entertain such a notion you are entirely correct.

Homer Barr is one of wrestlings immortals in the state of Pennsylvania, which is as close to wrestling Valhalla as one can get. He wrestled for Clearfield High School in tough central Pennsylvania, but only grappled for the varsity one year because there was always some Pennsylvania State Champ ahead of him. The year he did wrestle though he went undefeated and capped his season by taking the 185 pound State Championship.

After a four year break between high school and college Coach Barr traded his Bison for a Nittany Lion and proceeded to rewrite the record books at Penn State. He went four years losing only one dual match and finishing fourth, third and second in the NCAA. His senior year he lost the NCAA's to Princeton's Brad Glass in a referee's split decision. Only then did he find that he had been wrestling with mononucleosis for about a month.

He held the most pins record at PSU for a long time and is still considered by Nittany Lion Alumni and Administrators as Penn State's greatest heavyweight.

Barr decided it would be fun to wrestle in the Olympics but the best he could do was alternate heavyweight, losing to the eventual Olympic silver medalist.

A career in coaching was only a natural extension for such talent and he spent four years at Warren High School and then he moved on to become head mentor of State College High School. In ten years at one of Pennsylvania's prestige wrestling schools he had a fabulous 100-10 dual match record, six undefeated seasons and a dual meet winning streak that went to 64 matches.

Since coming to Massachusetts in 1966, Coach Barr has upgraded UMass wrestling from the regional doormat to a highly respected mat program that has had the spin-off effect of vitalizing New England college wrestling to the point where there are now four good teams and two more on the horizon. He has been almost singularly responsible for the rise of Massachusetts High School wrestling. (Wrestling has gone from two high schools in the state to over 100 because of his involvement.)

When it was time for the university and college teams to form a separate organization it was Barr who pioneered the move and served as first president of the New England University Wrestling Association. For all his efforts in wrestling he was honored on March 15, 1975 by being inducted into the Pennsylvania Wrestling Coaches Association Hall of Fame at the 38th annual Pennsylvania State High School Championships.

It is almost impossible for one to say they know him well, but after four years of working with him I can say I can sometimes predict him. He is a man whose actions speak louder than his words, and those words don't come all that often. As a coach he is tough, pragmatic and very intense. Off the mat he is a bit more relaxed but always wary. His family is extremely important to him and he spends much time with them.

I suppose the inevitable question is why such a talented coach is at UMass — a job where wrestling is not exactly a by-word. When he took the job he had probably the toughest challenge in college wrestling — build a program in a wrestling-poor area with not too much funds and not to much support. I doubt that some of the coaches at the Iowas and Oklahomas would have done half as well given the same situation.

It was a big job that Coach Barr feels is not done yet, but if anyone is big enough to "grapple" with the future of New England wrestling that person in Homer Barr and I wish him the very best of luck.

John Bock nas been MDC wrestling writer and UMass wrestling manager for four years.

Gorilla Chuck Smith scores for the Minutemen in fourth quarter of yesterday's farce. See story page 20.

Warriors bop Bulls; face Bullets in final

OAKLAND [UPI] — Rick Barry, on whose shooting Golden State sinks or swims, recovered from one of his poorest shooting nights for 14 fourth-quarter points that triggered the Warriors to an uphill 83-79 victory over the Chicago Bulls Wednesday night and a spot in the NBA Championship series for the first time in eight years.

It was an incredible but well deserved victory for the Warriors, who won the best of seven Western Division Series four games to three. Twice in the first half they trailed by as many as 15 points, but they kept fighting back and by the end of the third quarter had closed the deficit to six points at 65-59.

Then Barry, who scored only eight points in the first half — four of them on free throws, suddenly found the range and Golden State forged into the lead for the first time at 71-69 with 4:30 remaining.

In the early minutes of the fourth quarter, Barry scored four times, but it was a layup by rookie Phil Smith that finally gave the Warriors the lead. Chet Walker, who finished with 21 points, tied the score for Chicago at 71-71. A shot from the side by Bob Love gave the Bulls a two-point edge with less than three minutes to go.

Smith stole the ball from Walker and then made good on a layup to re-tie the score and Keith Wilkes, whose shooting in the first three quarters kept the Warriors from being blown off the court, followed with another layup for a two-point lead and Golden State stayed in front the rest of the way.

Wilkes finished as the Warriors' leading scorer with 23 and Barry had 22, nearly eight points below his playoff average. Walker led the Bulls also with 23.

The Bulls, with a 57 per cent shooting average, led at the half 47-36 and seemingly were on top to stay, when the Warriors recovered from a 36.4 first-half average to get back in the game late in the third quarter on 10 points by Wilkes.

In the fourth quarter the Warriors shot at 47.8 per cent and their defense stopped the Bulls cold and held them to a 20 per cent shooting average. The Warriors finished with a relatively poor 38.5 average, three points better than the Bulls, who came to a complete halt in the final quarter.

The Washington Bullets beat the defending champion Boston Celtics four games to two for the Eastern Conference crown and will open the Warriors. That series is also a best of seven playoff.

Ballbusters winners or losers?

By RUSS SMITH

The Ballbusters defeated Beta Kappa Phi 6-1 in the finals of intramural softball action yesterday, to win the men's title. Or did they? Immediately after the game was over, BKP failed an official protest of the contest with the intramural office. It seems the Ballbusters 'supposedly' used an illegal player, and would therefore automatically forfeit the game — naturally giving the Campus Championship title to the frat.

The story I got from Coach Don Filiault is this: Approximately three days after the rosters for softball were due in, he went down to add Dave Fisher to the team (you can add players up through your second game). The girl there said o.k., and he wrote the name down on a piece of paper. Everything's cool, right? Until this game.

Dave played in the championship game under a different name (the girl at the I.M. office said to use the names on the original roster commented the coach of the 'busters). Now how BKP knew Dave wasn't on the roster in Boyden, I'll never know. If Dave had made an error that gave the game to BKP would they have protested? No. But, they lost, and so the protest.

In any case, the Ballbusters did win the game and here it is:

BKP got up to bat first. Neal Pitchel singled into left to start the game, and scored BKP's lone run when Keith Weeman tripled up on the hill (you know, the one running down from the street to the fields) in super-deep left field (Dave Mucciarone had just hit one on the hill too, but the B' left fielder, Steve Tracy ran up the incline and caught it.).

The Ballbusters then got up and won the game in the first inning. Richie Lugton singled over second base. Al Mucha beat out a bunt down the third base line. After Steve Tracy skied to the short fielder, Bobby Feldberg hit one back to the mound. BKP pitcher, Tom Burke, elected to throw to third but too late. Bases loaded. One out later, John Curley bounced a base hit off first baseman Dave Mucciarone for an RBI single. Bases still full. And up steps our 'mystery player' (legal or not?) Dave Fisher. The count goes to two balls-one strike (full count in I.M. play). Burke, who is forced to get it over the plate or walk in a run, tosses a slow one over home, and it's hit for a two-run single and a 3-1 lead for the Ballbusters.

The Ballbusters scored three more times in the bottom of the second, to ice the game. Don Filiault singled to center, before pitcher Don Greenhalgh was issued a free pass to first. And then to drive a nail into the Frat-men's coffin, Allie Mucha's liner just found the right field line, and it screeched into right for a two run single, Allie going to second on the throw home. He eventually scored when Bob Feldberg was safe at first on a close play (and a good call by first base umpire Lloyd Alford).

That finished up the scoring for both teams, and only thing left was for the Ballbusters to play good defense. That they did. Shortstop Mucha made a nice stab of a ball all but in left field and still threw the runner out at first. Pitcher Greenhalgh allowed the Greek-guys only one more hit, to finish with a three-hitter.

Strikes: The best umpires the I.M. have worked this game with Art Papazian behind the plate; Steve Pedi, Cliff Blom and Lloyd Alford around the horn.

Baseball Wrap-up

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Don Baylor's one-out triple in the ninth inning scored Bobby Grich from first base Wednesday night to give the Baltimore Orioles and Mike Torrez a 3-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Grich singled off reliever Terry Forster and scored easily when Baylor's line drive whistled up the right centerfield alley to give Torrez his fifth triumph in six decisions.

Pat Kelly's leadoff home run, his second of the year, gave Chicago a 1-0 lead against Mike Torrez in the first inning. A pair of walks and Jorge Orta's run-scoring single made it 2-0 in the fifth inning.

The Orioles tied it 2-2 in the seventh inning when reliever Terry Forster came on for starter Wilbur Wood. Tommy Davis drew a leadoff walk and with two outs, Don Baylor drove a double high off the wall in leftfield that was ruled fan interference Davis scored. Brooks Robinson's second single of the game then scored the tying run.

BLOOMINGTON [UPI] — Rookie right-hander Jim Hughes, aided by Rod Carew's steal of home, shut out the Cleveland Indians 3-0 for the Minnesota Twins Wednesday night, handing Gaylord Perry his third straight loss.

Hughes, a 23-year-old right-hander who was pressed into starting duty when sickness and injury racked the Twins' front line pitching core, gave up four hits for his third straight win. He struck out five and walked one, pitching his second consecutive complete game.

Minnesota nicked Perry, 4-5, for a run in the first when Carew, who shares the American League record of seven steals of home, raced in to score, sliding under the pitch to the plate. It was his first home base steal against August 27, 1973.

You will be billed for equipment not turned in. All sports staffers are reminded that Friday night at 7:30, the cars will be leaving for Steak and Brew for the Sports Staff Dinner.

DETROIT [UPI] — Vada Pinson belted a game-opening homer and banged out a total of four hits to surpass the lifetime 2,700-mark Wednesday night while Nelson Briles yielded five hits to give the Kansas City Royals a 4-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Pinson led off the game with his second home run of the season and it turned out to be enough for Joe Coleman's fifth loss in seven decisions. Pinson also singled home a run in the second and then had two more doubles for a four-hit game. The four hits gave the 37-year old Pinson 2,701 career hits.

MONTREAL [UPI] — Rookie Gary Carter cracked a two-run homer in the second inning Wednesday night and Pepe Mangual drove home the winning run in the seventh inning to help preserve Woodie Fryman's fourth win of the season in a 5-4 victory for Montreal Expos over the Atlanta Braves.

The Expos rallied for three runs in the seventh inning. Carter doubled and Barry Foote singled. Pinch-hitter Jose Morales doubled to score Carter and tie the game 3-3. Montreal took a one-run lead when shortstop Blanks failed to pick up Tim Foli's ground ball as Foote scored.

NEW YORK [UPI] — Rusty Staub drove in three runs with a homer and a single and Dave Kingman doubled home two others Wednesday night, pacing the New York Mets to a 5-1 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Jerry Koosman allowed five hits and eight walks, but went the distance aided by four New York double plays to score his third win against one loss. The Giants scored their lone run off him in the third inning on Gary Matthews' infield out following singles by Derrel Thomas and Willie Montanez.

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Bill Robinson singled to left field to knock in Dave Parker from second base Wednesday night and give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 5-4 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Gorillas snicker at Springfield

UMass' Mike Lettera loses stick in yesterday's game against Springfield College, which the Minutemen won, 27-8. Lettera and teammates feasted on Springfield goalie, seemingly scoring at will to close their season.

By TOM CROWLEY

The UMass lacrosse team beat Springfield College in a laugher yesterday behind Boyden, 27-8. The Gorillas dominated almost completely in the contest as Jim Haddad and Bob Durland had eight saves compared to 21 for the Chief's goalies.

It was 8-2 at the end of the first period, 13-5 at half, 19-6 at the third quarter mark and finally, 27-8. Springfield scored three goals in the second half.

Most of the tallies were made on cut plays or beating Springfield in transition from offense to defense. They were all easy looking goals.

The defense played well as did the midfielders who caused the high score.

The defense played well as did the midfielders who caused the high score.

Half of Springfield's goals came on penalties, while UMass only had two man-up scores. Springfield did hit in the second pariod and played well and hard all game, but they were simply outmanned by the Minutemen.

Joe Toqneri had one goal and three assists for the Chiefs and Eddy Craver had two goals.

But Frank Garahan personally outscored the Chiefs as he scored Eight goals and had an assist. With this total, Garahan went over 100 points in his two-year career at UMass. At one point in the third quarter, Jeff Spooner sacraficed himself to set up Garahan.

Spooner himself had a good game as he collected three goals and six assists. Paul Martin, another senior, had three goals and an assist as did Vin LoBello.

Steve Pappas had five assists and Bill O'Brien had a goal and two assists before being ejected in the third period. O'Brien was in a shoving match with a Springfield player and Pappas was the third man in the fracas. The Chief's bench cleared, but nothing happened.

Besides the extra-curricular activities, the fans yelled approvement of captain Bill Blaustein's goal. Switching from defense to attack, Blaustein scored an unassisted goal on a long shot up the side. His defensive partner Ken Michaud had an assist on an earlier play.

The other scorers on the day were Mike Lettera and Kevin Patterson with two goals, Terry Keefe with two goals and two assists, Bill Arnold with one of each, Chuck Smith tallied a goal, and Gene Hardiman had two assists.

The highlights of the game for UMass scoring were:

— Vin Lobello scoring a jump shot after a long pass for the seventh goal.

— Frank Garahan scoring the ninth UMass goal on a long shot after a long pass from Steve Pappas.

— Patterson scoring the eleventh goal backhanded, completely faking out the Springfield goalie.

— O'Brien being credited with a goal when the Springfield goalie intercepted his pass to Patterson and dropped the ball into the goal.

— Frank Garahan poking in his own shot after the Chief goalie fumbled the ball after his first shot. It was the fourteenth UMass goal.

— The twenty-first UMass goal being scored by Paul Martin on a jump shot after a long pass by Jeff Spooner across the goal mouth.

SCOOP SHOTS . . . The Minutemen ended their season at 9-3 . . . the game Saturday with Middlebury is definitely cancelled . . . Saturday at one, a senior-freshman team will play a junior-sophomore team. According to Coach Garber, the senior-freshmen have yet to win in the series.

Bill Edelstein

The official cure

Much fuss has been raised lately by many people over the less-than-perfect officiating in a variety of sports. Now these people are quick to condemn, but the only solution they offer to poor calls by the professional impartials is for those same refs to review each contested sequence on video tape the instant after it happens before passing judgement. True, this method of enforcement would weed out the infidels and establish order, but the game or match in question would then consume so much time that the fans would have to be paid overtime to view the contest.

There are, however, many simple and not-so-simple solutions to bad officiating; ones that would not cause a game to drag, but would forever make the bad call obsolete:

—Let Oscar Robertson referee every basketball game from the stands; his insight and impartiality from the perspective is unmatched.

—Force all officials to pay to get in to the contests which they arbitrate. This would effectively negate home team advantages since the refs would become alienated by ticket prices.

—Ivest in doudelete delete —Invest in double runners for hockey linesmen.

—Let officials bet money on games they are calling. This will increase their interest in the contest, causing them to pay more attention to every play.

—Give tennis umpires new seats; you'd be faulting everybody too if you had sit in a high chair.

—Place the football line judge in the "pit" (between the offensive and defensive lines) where he can be right in the thick of the area in which most infractions are committed.

—Give the officials Wheaties before every contest.

—Change existing federal laws to make arguing with baseball umpires a capital offense. This might not improve ball-strike calls, but it would effectively eliminate any complaints.

—Get Martha Mitchell to razz the perpetrator of a questionable call.

—Cut and then splice together the stripes of basketball referees' uniforms to make a solid black and a solid white jersey, then place one ref on the home team and the other on the visitors'.

—Enlarge the size of the baseball to equal that of the basketball. Umpires can thus easily detect whether or not an outfielder trapped a ball.

—Change the garb of the hockey referee to knickers, roller skates and a beanie; fans will be laughing too hard to get angry with the poor blighter.

—Insist that all basketball officials pass the bar examination before being permitted to make a judgment call.

—Institute a system of Brownie Points for teammates who fink on each other, with a cash award being given at the end of the season to the "Top Tattler".

—Have players shoot fingers whenever a controversy occurs.

—Give officials incorrect time schedules at the airport, and when they fail to show up at game time, commence play without them.

—Lessen the pressure on the men in blue, or black and white — supply them with a book of witty comebacks to coaches insults.

—If all else fails, take two and hit to right.

SC drubs batswomen

Springfield College, a powerhouse in the women's ranks, drubbed the UMass Minutewomen yesterday in a 20-4 softball farce.

The Chietettes, who will be making a trip to Holland this summer, banged our seven extra-base hits in the seven inning contest and also had 10 singles.

UMass' starting pitcher, LuAnn Fletcher, pitched reasonably well but was hurt by some shoddy fielding on the part of her teammates. Needless to say, Springfield was stacked with good hitters.

UMass scored its four runs this way: Chris Basile doubled home two in the third inning, Gail Matthews hit a sacrifice fly in the fifth and LuAnn Fletcher had an RBI single in the sixth.

Springfield scored thusly: 2-3-4-7-2-2-0.

The UMass team seemed to be having a great time, despite the fact that they were losing. Laughter at strikeouts, joviality admist errors and complacency in defeat typified the spirit of the day.

Fulfilling fantasies

Want to know one of my fantasies? Well it ends like this, "Thank you for attending this evening's match at Curry Hicks Cage. Final score UMass 21 Oklahoma 15."

For UMass wrestling to host one of the cream of the crop teams in college wrestling — that's a fond wish. For UMass to beat them — that's the fantasy.

The truth of the matter is that UMass wrestling is a slight bit closer to making my hope come true but still eons away from fulfilling my fantasy.

In the way of a minor revelation I must admit what some people may have suspected from time to time — for the last four years while I have been bringing the University community play by play from the wrestling mats of New England I have served the Redmen-Minutemen as wrestling manager. Now managers are a relatively common breed of frustrated jock that can be seen running after footballs, basketballs, towels, and record books at colleges from sea to shining sea. Wrestling managers in New England, though, are a rare species. Partly due to the fact that wrestling is not a prestige sport in New England and partly because probably not 1 per cent of the students in New England have ever seen a wrestling match.

I didn't take the job for its glamour — because after four years there still isn't any. I took it because I think wrestling is the most fantastic sport around. I have always wanted to pay a debt to wrestling for helping me. In high school I was terribly overweight, uncoordinated, and had no confidence in my ability to walk down the hall. My involvement brought my weight down, gave me some confidence as a person, and taught me self-discipline.

My efforts in helping wrestling would never be as a competitor, though, because I had less than a distinguished high school record. (Something like 0-10 my junior-senior year.) So the UMass situation was tailor made for me. I could help wrestling in a college program that was on its way up by helping publicize the sport and its participants. In addition, as manager, I could show those wrestlers that represented UMass that someone did appreciate their efforts.

I suppose the test of my success in working on these goals will be how wrestling fares next year when I am gone. Will attendance continue to grow, will the Collegian still give it back page coverage without threats of having the sports editor used as a practice dummy, will people start asking, again, what NEUWA means?

Now, if I am permitted, a bit of nostalgia ... BEST DUAL MATCH February 1972 — The then Redmen whp perennially strong Springfield College on their own mats for SC's first dual match loss to a New England team in six years and UMass' first dual match victory over the Chiefs.

BEST TOURNAMENT MATCH, February 1973 — The 118 pound finals of the first New England University Wrestling Association Championships. Senior Dave Amato, who had finished as runner-up in the NE's twice before, was down 7-3 to URI's Rich Adham. At stake a trip to the NCAA's and Amato's pride. With thirty seconds on the clock he reversed Adham into a pin with one second on the clock!

BEST TOURNAMENT VICTORY, March 1974 — A Nero's URI Rams had run rough shod all over New England wrestling including convincing dual match victories over UMass, BU, and Springfield College. They were the favorites to take the New England Tourney at Dartmouth College. URI had six finalists, UMass five but the gap in points came right down to the heavyweight finals where another of UMass' Homer Barr coached heavies brough the championship back to UMass.

BEST WRESTLER, I can't honestly say who has been the best. Goldberg had the best record, Dambman the most pins, Amato the most takedowns, and on and on. In my eyes all of the grapplers I worked out with and talked to and wrote about were the greatest.

But the Goldbergs, Buckbees, Dambmans, Irelands, and Bensons were given way to new names and bodies like Blom, Sachon, Jabaut, Fenton, Ruggeri. I wish for them what I wished for the others — that their conditioning never give out, that their strength never fail them, and that their moves always work. But mostly that they compete as hard and cleanly as they can.

Lastly I want to say thank you to some special people and groups of people. To Coach Barr, thanks for treating me with the same respect as the wrestlers and for putting up with my prophecies. To Mr. Robert O'Connell — thanks for being one of the administrators who was always behind UMass wrestling. To Dr. George Snook — thank you for being UMass' number one fan and for giving guys a second chance to compete after injury. To George Ireland — thank you for putting up with my always leaving you out of the articles and not getting the ink you deserved — 1973 New England Heavyweight Champ and one really excellent person. To the seniors — Scanlon, Elmont, Knowicz, O'Connell, Chateauneuf, Muri, and Swartz — thanks for sticking it out with me. To the MDC Sports Staff — thanks for letting me push a "minor" sport into a little prominence from time to time. To the fans who have watched the Minutemen grow better — thanks for making it seem worth while.

Remember "People who wrestle with their problems come out on top." Keep wrestling Massachusetts.

Below The Salt is a weekly fine UMass Daily Collegian, student art-real world magazine of the newspaper, Amherst, Mass.

Beneath Below the Salt

Well, it's that time of year again. It seems that we've just gotten started and already it's time to say good-bye. Most of you will be coming back in the fall, but to those who are not, we'll miss you. What I dread most about this time is having to say good-bye to the graduating staff members. Everybody who spends any time in this office tends to have a great impact on what the paper looks like. That input will be sorely missed.

Marla Richmond came up from the music ranks to fill the Theatre Editor position. If I were giving out awards or something like that, she would get the Most Helpful On Tuesday Nights award for making paperwork disappear faster and better than anyone else. I hope they appreciate you out there, Marla.

Quiet Ed Smith is leaving, too. Where, anybody's guess. He successfully took over the book pages when we retired Fred Weiss, and if he can adapt as quickly elsewhere he's got it made. Replacement on this end looks almost impossible.

Lori Leiderman won't be eating out much around Amherst, either. Rumor has it that she is being sought by some big Boston magazine, but you know how these rumors go. Follow this space for more info.

For some reason Whitmore decided that they could do without Kris Jackson and they are dumping him at the end of this month. I don't think the world is ready for him and Salt is not at all ready to lose him. Thanks a lot Whitmore, we love you too. You try and find us someone to fill a three by eight space every week with pure genius, or at least craziness.

Also being unleashed against our will is Don McGilvray. If anyone has etched himself a place in our hearts, it most certainly is Don. Watching him and his art grow in the last year or so has been amazing. We are pleased to have been a part of it for as long as we have. His work is the best way we can show you what he has been about in his four years here, so somewhere in this issue we decided to run a "best of" so all of us can say good-bye with a bang. Probably, even Oscar will miss him.

The biggest blow to the staff is Michael C.P. Kostek II, graduating into the great beyond, leaving the fine arts paper after more than three years of excessive inspiration. Back in the old days he was a music reviewer, one of the best Poor Richard's ever found. Then, in a fit of brilliance, someone made him Music Editor. He proceded to recruit the best and the brightest and convince record companies to send us the best and the brightest to review. It was just a beginning.

A year and a half ago Michael became Fine Arts Editor and converted Poor Richard's (already a dead joke) to Below the Salt. He made a viable alternative to everything around, attracting nuts from Southwest to Sylvan. He started with a staff that knew nothing about newspapers, but knew what they liked and taught them to put out a newspaper without losing any of their integrity. Mistakes were made, but everything was done in the spirit for which Salt was named. Letting the people (all kinds of people) know what was happening around them and have more input, more thought. Michael was consistant in his attitude and his leadership.

His finest ability was inspiration. He, himself, is a great writer and he could get people to write some great stories merely by dropping hints or sitting and talking. Afternoons in the Salt office were more educational than most classes while Michael was drawing out the most unusual minds UMass could hide.

Now he is Music Editor once again, doing what he does best. Cries of "Michael, come look at this page," still ring out at the printers. We trust his judgement. He's the only one who can spell.

When he leaves, there will be no one to replace him. No one who knows as much about so many things. He will forever be "Not always right, but never wrong". He will forever be Below the Salt.

To the rest of you who are not graduating, I have warn you that we are going to have to work a lot harder to make up for these major losses. Thanks for making this semester as good as it was. Keep the creative juices flowing over the summer. I'd like to see you all, bright and shining in September. Keep Thinking!

A Message of a Lifetime

by Mike Kostek

However.

This being my last singing ink for this publication, I'd like to duck in quickly with a few pogroms. First, while it's not always been the sweetest of beats to walk (generous amounts of politics, neuroses and genuine small-mindedness have plagued many of my colleagues throughout the years), my three and a half years with Below the Salt are certainly the Most Memorable part of the odd, gypsy-like declaration of the mind's eye (Aye!) that is UMass. Nathan Gorenstein, in maybe his finest moment, said it best, declaring UMass to be like an amusement park, with all the various rides (Bartlett, the Campus Center, The Physics Dept., etc.) and the people who run them (Bromery, Gage, etc.).

But yes, working for this paper has been quite an Opportunity to meet extraordinary people on both sides of the dance. From Buddy Rich to Rex Fowler of Aztec Two-Step in the music world to the day-to-day UMass likes of Steve Feld and Davey Sokol, it's never been dull.

Ah, the chance to rub folders and work with the likes of Gary UManity Gomes, Jeff Clayton, Peter Royal the Record Man, Jon Carr, Ducky Dejnak and Lorianne Yeslow in the past has been a fantastic thing. And I'd like to thank those present for their inestimable help, for being the finest staff on this not-always-honorable newspaper: Andy MacKenzie, Jack Cahill, Tyla Michelove, David Santos, Don McGilvray, Ken Blanchard, Kris Jackson, Paul Kontrimas, David Miller, Ross Nerenberg, Gina Starodoj, Mark Levitan, Debbie Schafer, Bill Howell, Jeff Polman, Ed Smith, Linda Sherksnis, John Wassell, Ed Fleischer, Marla Richmond, Kevin Pelliteir, Susan Doskocil.

(Listen, the Special Go Getaway Special is Sunday night at the mansion at 51 Townehouse. Come by and let fly).

The final message is that of a lifetime. In three and a half years I've had the chance to hear and review over 200 albums and concerts and enjoy the thorny privileges of being a media hotshot. But it's the growth that's important. This paper opened up new horizons of music, writing and fields of inquiry I never would have found on my own. Working for this modest media outlet has changed my life. And you can do it too. All you have to do is make the big move upstairs next semester. It might be your last chance. Ok? "And if I don't see you no more in this world, I'll meet you on the next one, and don't be late."

The Killing Question

by David Joyce

Two weeks ago, 2,200 students gathered in the Student Union ballroom to hear a presentation on the mystery of the assassination of John F. Kennedy. This article is not about that event, but grows out of the three hour question and answer period that followed the J.F.K. lecture.

John Kennedy's death is the most talked about because it is the most blatent of the political assassinations that have shaped recent American history. Three others have died in recent memory, and questions, doubts, and rumors have persisted up to this day. Those of whom I speak are: Malcom X, Martin Luther King, and Robert Kennedy. This article is short because the detail are lacking, but enough is known to raise doubts as to the "offical" version of these deaths.

Malcom X was killed on the first day of National Brotherhood Week, Feb. 3, 1975, while speaking to a group in Harlem. As he was talking, a fight broke out along the right side of the hall. Malcom's bodyguards rushed over to break it up, and as they did a number of people (never clearly defined) rose up from the front of the audience and opened fire with shotguns and pistols. Four persons were arrested and later tried and found guilty, but according to witnesses, more than the four fired.

On April 6, 1968, while talking to some friends on a balcony of a motel in Memphis, Martin Luther King was shot once with a high-powered rifle. He died shortly afterwards. On the same day that Robert Kennedy died, one James Earl Ray was captured at a London airport. Ray, at the urging of his lawyer, pleaded guilty, and in a 90 minute trial was given 99 years for the crime. Questions as to how Ray eluded the police and FBI were never answered. Questions as to where Ray got the money to support his escape were never answered. Rumors abounded, such as that the plane which flew Ray from Memphis to Toronto after the shooting was a CIA chartered flight, or that the white mustang seen leaving the house where the shot was fired was a decoy used to give Ray time to make his getaway. But perhaps the most damaging statement of all is the one Ray himself said, "There was a conspiracy, I didn't kill King." Ray's request for a new trial, which would certainly unveil some interesting things, is currently in appeal.

There is now "HARD" evidence that Sirhan Sirhan did not fire the bullet that killed Robert Kennedy on June 6, 1968. Ballistics test and autopsy data show that the fatal bullet was fired from behind and at a range of not more than three inches. The riffiling marks on the bullet do not match test bullets fired from Sirhan's gun. When these facts are added to the fact that Sirhan was in front of and, at the closest, two feet from R.F.K. when the shots were fired, then a reasonable case is made for a "second gun". It also seems there were more bullets fired than Sirhans gun could hold. A certain "Security Guard' hired that day by the owners of the Ambassador Hotel (who themselves have interesting Mafia connections), pulled his gun and dropped to the floor when shooting broke out. The bullets in Bobby Kennedy's body entered from an extremely upward angle. No one knows where this guard now is.

Not only are there questions about these men's deaths, but there are also questions as to the shooting of George Wallace. How could Aurther Bremmer, an unemployed assistant janitor, afford to travel to Canada (stalking President Nixon, we were told), follow Wallace to several different campaign stops, staying in the best hotels? We were never given any data as to where the bullets struck, or any data as to ballistics tests performed on the weapon used.

Ted Kennedy, whose own bizarre experience on Chappaquiddock as certainly never been adequately explained and may be another in this series of sinister power moves, has recently called for a re-opening of these cases. His concern is our concern, as to the extent of the proliferation of "Political reality" vs. historical reality in this country.

I have raised these questions to show that there is considerable doubts as to what the American people, and the world, were told about these "acts void of any political meaning". To dig out the facts surrounding these events calls for massive research effort, more than any one person can do. those who find this article incomplete are invited to help fill the gaps of knowledge about these events.

Tonight there will be the first meeting of The Amherst chapter of the Assassination Information Bureau, 7:30 p.m., Room 804 Campus Center. All interested and serious researchers are urged to attend.

Culture or bussed

by Jim Paulin

The Five College buses are presently as aesthetic as a bulldozer or an armored personnel carrier, but there's a possibility that they could become mobile works of art. Loyd Searle, bus driver and a UMass Communications Studies major has been circulating questionnaires aboard the buses to see if the public approves of the idea of paintings on the ceilings. He also wants to know if the riders would approve of music being played during the ride.

Response has been favorable, with several people commenting "bravo" on the questionnaires. The questionnaires ask if passengers would feel imposed upon by art and music, and also if the two mediums would stimulate interpersonal communication.

Several Five College art teachers approve of the plan, and would encourage their students to participate if funding can be obtained. Loyd hopes to get money from foundation grants. The art would come from winning entries in a Five College arts competition. Students would create designs on pieces of poster board and submit them to a panel of judges, consisting of 5-College Art faculty. Prizes will be awarded according to the number of buses.

Right now, nothing is concrete but hope. With providence smiling, the competition will be underway in the fall.

UMass professor of design, Herb Paston likes the idea, saying: "From a design point of view it's very exciting...people will enjoy the buses more." He said that his students are receptive to it and would be willing to enter the competition.

The way it is now, you walk onto one of those olive-drab bread boxes, select a seat, the driver closes the door, shifts from park to drive, the cylinders oomph and ah with monotonous regularity, the axles dutifully spin and the rubber perfunctorily rotates. Unless you're doing some serious reading or writing, the main thing affecting you is the performance of the machinery, the trip is a bore, and you can't wait to get out the door.

Art on the ceiling won't turn the buses into motorized Sistine Chapels, but it could make the trip more enjoyable, perhaps even stimulating. Eventually, people would tire of seeing the same painting, but that could be remedied by making the arts competition an on-going project, perhaps an art gallery type arrangement, wherein the works of art would be changed on a regular basis.

Another part of Loyd's hope of a renaissance of five-college transportation would involve re-routing the buses via scenic country roads rather than cacaphonous, traffic choked neon atrocity of Route 9.

But Loyd can't do all of this by himself, so if you're interested in getting involved in this worthy project, contact him at the administrative offices of the UMass Fine Arts Center or call him at his home on 33 State St., Northampton, 584-41

Life on Roth...again

My Life as A Man
by Phillip Roth
Holt, Rinehart and Winston
Reviewed by Philip Zitowitz
325 P. $8.95

Personal erotic and intersexual material in an English or American novel used to be either alluded to obliquely to stimulate the sexual hormones of the reader, inserted and then despised as pornography, or excluded. The French have been more successful with their literature. L''Histoire D'' O (History of O) and L'Image (The Photo) were masterful works of confessional erotic art. Henry Miller pioneered the technique in America, only to be banned, ignored and then rediscovered. Philip Roth's Portnoy's Complaint revolutionized this style of writing. Portnoy, with the aid of Dr. Speilvogel's psychological couch, fessed up and told all. He took the seriousness of sexual confrontation, antagonism and fantasy and shaped it into a comic epic of contemporary American sexual relations. in between the belly laughs, publishers groaned at the presumed negative response of feminest groups. Roth would be an abusive pig, because he maintained and prolonged the image of women as a sexual object. Instead, most lib groups welcomed the book and found spokeswomen to write their own confessional version. Erica Jong's Fear of Flying retaliated with a dosage of the same heady, bawdy, comically painful sexotica. Confessionals are more popular than ever in this decade. If we fess up our sins, it is presumed, we shall be absolved and be able to enter the kingdom of heaven. In My Life as a Man, Roth confesses his troubles with women, marriage, art and life, in a howl of inspired pain.

Roth's book is good — but it is not good enough. He displays greater ease with dialogue and with emotional depth. The narrative of the text, however, is superficial and brittle. Our Gang tackled Trick E. Dixon and his cohorts with an onslaught of first-rate burlesque and comic invention. The incidents were funny enough, but it badly lacked political sophistication and a sense of modulation and control of the comic material. The Breast was an imaginative failure of sexual metamorphosis and childhood regression. Portnoy's Complaint was a smashing success in its own scope. With My Life as a Man, the reader has the right to ask if he has a talent besides mimicry and burlesque? When will Roth put forth an imaginative material divorced from the raw obsessive facts of his life?

The book centers around the novelist, Peter Tarnopool. As a man and as a writer, Tarnopool is obsessed with the attempt to live in a manly, courageous fashion. He wants to develop a sensibility of strength. His achilles heel is women and he would like to relate to them without giving himself away. The end result of his serious and obsessional effort is a vow of retirement.

"I wanted to be placed in sexual quarantine, to be weaned from the other sex."

The novel is structured in two parts. The first, entitled, "Useful Fictions" bends, shapes, and distorts the facts of Tarnopool's struggle with women into imaginative short stories. "Salad Days", is the better. The characters are composites of the best of earlier Roth creations. Nathan Zuckerman, an eastern urban intellectual Jew has a sexual bonanza with Al the Zipper King's nice Jewish daughter. The next story, "Courting Disaster" or Serious in the Fifties hesitates and falters. The longest piece, "My True Story," attempts to tell it the way it really happened. His story is an obsessive tale of Tarnopool's victimazation by his she-wolf wife, Maureen. He devotes all his life and art to the marital struggle.

"I would have laughed had anyone suggested that struggling with a woman over a marriage would come to occupy me in the way that exploring the South Pole had occupied Admiral Byrd — or writing Madame Bovary had occupied Flaubert."

Tarnopool was tricked into marriage with Maureen by her fradulent use of a urine sample. She simulated pregnancy to blackmail Peter into marriage and when asked for proof she goes into a poor neighborhood and pays a pregnant woman for a sample. Their marriage is one of persistent sexual antagonism — guerilla warfare waged on the bed. Each is bent upon annihilating the person of the other. Tarnopool is no longer able to write and they violently separate. He sues for divorce and meets Susan Seaburry, a post-debutante, who is described as, "a collection of symptoms instead of a human being." Susan is timid, fragile and sexually frigid. She needs a ward to protect her against the evils of life. Susan is as timid as Maureen is agressive. Nevertheless, Tarnopool cannot handle either woman and must rely on the psychoanalytical and therapeutic talents of Dr. Speilvogel. Susan pines away, on the verge of a mental breakdown at her mother's home, while Maureen has a violent confrontation with her husband. Tarnopool, at this occasion, loses his sense of guilt and superego and becomes pure, raging id. He threatens to smash her head in and she defecates in her pants. His response to this beating is, "The real thing — and it was a marvelous. I was loving it."

Throughout their worst rituals of mutual degradation, Roth is able to apply the balming hand of humor. The plot is interspersed with incidents of self-parody. He makes fun of his serious Jewish writing vein through the mention of Tarnopool's first novel, The Jewish Father. Sensitive critical reviews of his, "Useful Fictions," punctuate the autobiographical "My True Story." He is able to ridicule the literary critic and his own thematic material simultaneously. His parody is a welcome antidote to the arrogance Roth usually displays (Neil Clugman's narration in Goodbye Columbus). Nevertheless, in his black humor, there is a stinginess of response and a meanness of spirit.

Roth is degrading to women. His female characters are either wild-eyed man haters, timid birds, or dual and mallable devotees to the Karma Sutra. Maureen's motive for her highly neurotic and sadistic behavior is poorly explained. She is a wildcat of animosity, a slit, as Roth calls them, devoted to Tarnopool's ultimate castration. Roth's men are unable to combine love and sexuality — sex becomes violation by definition.

Roth's narrative whines in a tone of self-justification, and whimpers the plaints of a victimized man. He is not able to detach himself from the autobiographical facts of his life. His lack of ironic detachment makes his narrative strident, uneven and moor-flat. He submerges in his personal obsession and is not able to fully re-emerge.

"Of course, to give up the obsession would surely have made the most sense; only, obsessed, I was incapable of not writing what was killing me as I was of altering or understanding it."

Philip Roth has a great ability which protrudes at several points in My Life as a Man. By the writing of this novel, I hope he is able to exorcize his personal obsessions and write the great novel of which he is capable.

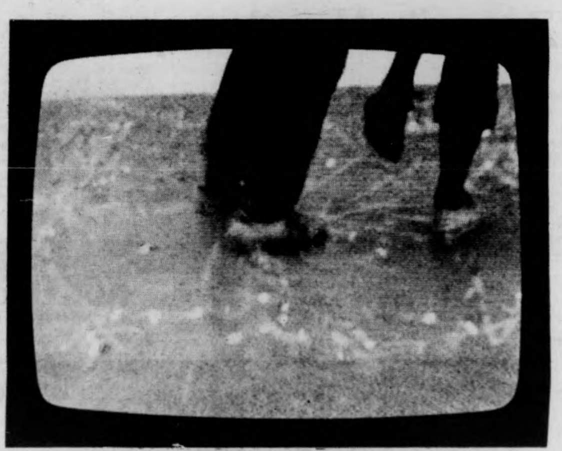
With Hare Krishna (electrified) at the back of my perch inside the Student Union Gallery and the music of the 50's via NRBQ "R C Cola," the Everly's and Lesley Gore and more, I sat and experienced C.A. Forget's B.F.A. thesis show in sculpture. More like a personalized mixed media presentation, actually.

Three interest areas are presented in the exhibition. The first to capture the observer's attention upon entering the gallery is the music section (audio and visual). What greets the eye and (assaults) the ear is an old tube run radio tuned to static sitting on a typical 50's metal and formica kitchen table. Many people came in and tried to adjust or shut off the radio. Above the table and radio is a collection of Hi-Fi lp covers of the Ventures, Jan & Dean, and other oldies. On down the line is a sequence of seemingly unrelated pack-rat inspired art: Drawings of heaps of alphabet letters visually punned into rats nests, as well as a mock nest. Carol explains how she has collected many of the items in her life in much the same way as this creature does, often going for the shinny scraps and pieces of oddities.

Much of the show is composed of types of these pack rat findings, slightly modified relics of the past including an ironically usual photo album. It consists of black poloroids with meaningful events of her's and everybody's life. Instead of a photo however, each has a title written in white on the black of the photo area "my first piano recital, five years old", "my sister and I eating watermelon on the big rock, four and six years old" etc. The only real photos are a page of Beatles cards we all chewed so much gum to possess.

The biggest area of interest is the title area, Jitterbug on Film. The art of this area involved Carol and partner dancing the bug on approximately 250-300 ft. of clear leader that was spread out on the wooden dance floor installed in the gallery. As they danced to NRBQ's "R C Cola", their feet tangled and scratched the film. It was Carol's intent to be able to splice the film and play it back with the audio portion of the performance. Because of the problems encountered in doing so, the original idea took a backseat to the actual concept itself. She explains that the show was by no means to describe completely what was going on in any particular era, but rather extracted bits of the eras culture which have survived and have become attractive to her. She has been using many of these bits and pieces as a taking off point for her work as exemplified in the drawings and collages on the pack rat idea.

It's all right don't you know it's all right.



I don't want no salad or none of that other slop

From the visual, the scrapbook with no photo photos to the audio, the static of the radio and the overall nostalgic music, to the visual puns on the pack rats, the show presented a variety of personal splices of Carol's life (and ours as well) — weird.

STUDENT UNION GALLERY
University of Massachusetts, Amherst

This semester has been an exciting one for the Student Union Gallery. With its central location, rapid turnover of shows, visiting artist program, and extensive hours (9 a.m.-9 p.m.), the Student Union Gallery has become a center of art activity for the UMass Campus. Because of its policy of maintaining a loose informal atmosphere, this gallery has served well as an experimental workshop as well as a place where more formalized work could be hung. This kind of gallery situation is unique in the way it is totally student-organized and run, leaving all of what goes into it up to the ideas and energies of the students.

What has been going on in the Student Union Gallery this semester has been very valuable in terms of bringing together people in all of the areas within the art department, and, more importantly, in terms of bringing student artists into the view of the rest of the university community so that there is input, feedback, and involvement outside of the general art department.

We here at Below the Salt hope that the Student Union Gallery will continue bringing in interesting artists, art people, stimulating programs, and the services of a smoothly running gallery.

Five College Dance Concert

The 5-College Dance Concert — Rain or Shine!

Yes, it rained, but the dancers undoubtedly shone last Monday night on the Fine Arts Center. Due to the weather, it took a little longer than immediately at 7 p.m. for the concert to get underway, but get underway it did indeed.

Two numbers were unfortunately cancelled from the program at the last minute, due to circumstances beyond anyone's control. The caller for the Heymakers' projected square dance was drowning in her muddy driveway and could not flounder away from her home in Orange; and the "Winds in the Ruins" number was cancelled for fear of ruining with water a very expensive and unreplaceable costume.

But these two things did not dampen the enthusiasm of either the audience or the dancers; the show had to go on.

The first people to perform were the Israeli International Dancers. Under the concrete direction of Ms. Rhoda Metzger, the group danced five different and very well executed pieces.

Next was a solo modern dance by Ms. Brenda Charron. In a plum leotard and tights, Ms. Charron demonstrated a level of competence in dance technique not found at every dance concert around here.

Third on the program was a dance called "Tap Rap". Well, what the audience heard was just that — seven dancers from the Sylvan Area Colloquium's Beginning Tap Dance. Done with canes and top hats, not to mention multi color tights, white t-shirts, cut-offs of dark pants, and, to further add a sense of congruity, black cardboard bow ties, the audience enjoyed the number almost as much as the performance.

Then came the twenty-girl chorus line...performing to the loud and lively beat of drummer Steve Casper, they suggested a new dimensional role for the steps of the Fine Arts Center facing the pond.

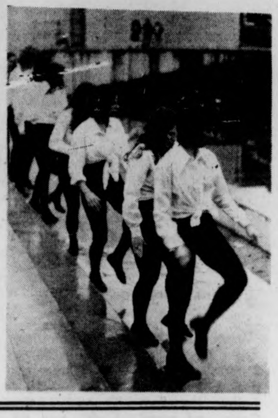
The evenings events were wrapped up with the Second Tying Up of The Fine Arts Center. Once again, participants took their coils of rope, chain, juke or wire, studied with muddled bewilderment the blueprints of the building in an attempt to figure out where they were supposed to be stationed, and eventually did indeed tie up the building.

Eventually, security received enough complaints from tripping students who were too stupid to see the rope and did not enjoy where it took them...

But all in all, the audience, the dancers, passers who got tied up in the happening, had a good time at the concert. There was a lot of talk about doing it again and bringing in more performers, and further mind expanding group happenings like typing up the building...

Perhpas the time will come in the near future (or at least the next semester) when we will once again be treated to an evening of this kind of group entertainment. Lets hope so!

Already, the consequences of the performance are being felt; members of the "Tap Rap" have been asked to perform at an exclusive engagement at Hampshire college; and members of the chorus line are going to be filmed in a movie during this coming week and Wier Chrisemer, director and conductor of the Othmar Schoeck Memorial Society for the Preservation of Unusual and Disgusting Music has noticed that the batteries on his Walki-Talkie, used in typing up the building, are almost totally zonked...



"Toe Zone", Northampton

by Susan Doskocil

The Smith College Spring Dance Concert was held last Friday and Saturday evenings in Theater 14 at Smith College in Northampton, Mass. at 8 p.m.

Consisting mainly of works resulting from the pointe and classical repertoirey class, there was a lot of toe-dancing indicative of lots of hours in the dance studio.

There were also a few non-ballet works.

The first number on the program, "Antics" was also one of my favorites. Choreographed by Nancy Strausberg and danced by herself and eight other dancers, it was a really great farce on the all-American Football fights.

Costumes consisted of what you would expect a football team to sport i.e., Sweatpants and brightly colored numbered t-shirts.

It was somewhat reminiscent of the 5-College Moving Company's routine "5 Aces" but it still differed from that on a number of points. For one thing, there were nine instead of five dancers; for another, there was a referee who instigated the action in many instances. Besides that, the actions were more group-funny stuff, rather than each individual trying to steal the stage from the other players.

"A Cosmonology" was another example of non-ballet. The spaciness suggested by the breathing, the deep arm movements, as well as the very eery music that faded in and out gave a tireless quality to this piece, which was enhanced further by the dreamy and distant sort of glaze on Nelson's face, the choreographer and dancer.

Next on the program were a series of selected short solo pieces from as far back as 1879. Each of these was performed on toe-shoes to the accompaniment of the piano. Among them were pieces from "Aurora," "Les Syphlides", "Swan Lake" to name a few.

All five dancers performed with a remarkable air of showmanship emanating chiefly from high body carriages and a dazzling array of beautifully polished teeth. On a more serious note the pointe work demonstrated in this half of the program was good, but would have not been hurt by a little more careful placement of the feet for the final grandiose bow each piece was polished off with, and perhaps a little less display of our carnivore trademarks.

"The Banshee" was a rather interesting work presented by three dancers to a number of different types of jazz. One really impressive aspect of this dance was that all three dancers had controlled high leg extensions; they also were of the same basic shape and size, which, while certainly not an absolute requisite for a dance, was in this case very pleasing to the eyes, because so much of the dance had them doing the same steps.

Certain members of the audience were particularly moved to applaud the last segment of this dance, and continued to accompany the rhythm right through its finish.

My concern for future performances of this dance is that the dancers slow down a little bit on the execution of each step, rather than appear to be concentrating prematurely on the one coming up. A little more pleasure demonstrated on the step they are doing while they were doing it would have made the audience appreciate even more some of the really nice technique of which they are obviously capable.

Finally, I want to compliment the probably endless hours spent on the "Russian Fantasy", a piece comprised of several group dances. According to the program, it was originally choreographed as a "pas de dix" (that's "steps for ten" for those French Delinquents among you) but was restaged for six, and done very well.

Danced in the, by now considered classical, tutus, the flourishes which I earlier condemned on the solos were perfectly in "step" done here. It was very pleasing to see the pattersn and leaps and extensions done by these six dancers, and gave the whole evening the polishing touch that made it so memorable.

All in all, the concert was a delightful way to spend the early hours of a spring night. Lets hope we see more performance indicative of the high level of accomplishment this group seems to contain.

One puzzle, two solutions

Woyzeck,
by Georg Buchner
Presented by Die Fahrende Schauspieltruppe der Universitat Maine and The University of Massachusetts Dept. of Theater reviewed by David Miller

Whether by good luck or clumsiness (sometimes bureaucracies don't communicate too well with each other), this past week saw the performances of two different productions of Georg Büchner's cryptic play, Woyzeck. The first production was presented by "Die fahrende Schauspieltruppe der Universitat Maine", or the Traveling Performance Group of the University of Maine. It was performed in Hampden Dining Commons on Monday, May 5, entirely in German. The second production, by the UMass Theater Department, opened three nights later and is still running, with performances through the 24th of this month; it is being presented in the Fine Arts Center's Studio Theatre in a new English translation by David M. Knauf, the Department's chairman. Coincidences such as this rarely happen — this one provides an excellent opportunity for the comparison of different approaches to the same script and the implications of those approaches.

A description of the play itself is a bit hampered by the unusual circumstances which surround it. Büchner died in 1837 at the age of 23, leaving behind him a small but powerful collection of writings. Woyzeck was left unfinished — although four drafts of the play (or parts of it) exist, the scenes were never ordered, and Büchner left no directions as to his intentions. The result is that, for about 100 years, directors, critics, and translators have been trying to come to grips with the 30 or so fragments of scenes, attempting to put them in some coherent order — frequently with perfectly atrocious results. In any case, although many different interpretations of the play can be made, some basic threads are common to all of them. Woyzeck at its heart, describes the madness into which Johann Woyzeck, a common soldier, sinks. He is beset by authority figures which make outrageous demands on him, in the names of science and duty; he lives amidst people that he does not understand and cannot reach out to — capped by his intense jealousy of his wife, Marie, and his suspicion of her adultery; his own conciousness of cosmic forces and his exaggerated perceptions of his environment expand and push him to the breaking point. As a kind of release from the overwhelming pressures on him, he murders Marie — but the relief which this provides is clearly only temporary. So Woyzeck is a tragic play, but the tragedy can ge given different points of focus — in the directions of political oppression, personal torment, cosmic awareness, or simple murder.

The "Fahrende Schauspieltrüppe" production chose for its focus the simple murder; the performance opened with Marie's death and played the work as a flashback, ending with the death. The ordering of the scenes here (in fact, in both cases) was roughly chronological, with the events leading to the murder occuring as they would have in a realistic play. The staging was done with almost the extreme of simplicity; a single circle of chairs provided the audience seating, and a single round black platform acted as the main playing area. There were also four aisles, used as secondary playing areas, and dividing the audience into four quadrants. Lighting, costumes, and props were all kept to a functional minimum. Clearly, the production was designed well for touring — the technical elements required only about an hour for set-up. The great advantage to this form of ensemble work is the great potential it has for audience contact and intimacy. Unfortunately, much of the characterization was wooden, even allowing for the fact that most of the characters in Woyzeck are not fully developed; the most notable exceptions to this were the actors playing Woyzeck, the Captain, Karl, the Grandmother, and the Mountebank, all of whom invested their roles with at least three dimensions and a good deal of vitality. Another problem with this production was its frequent lack of focus — something which will be returned to.

The University Theater production focuses on Woyzeck's personal torment and anguish; the murder does not appear inevitable from the start, but is the man's only way to come to grips with the forces around and about him. The staging here approaches the extreme of elaborateness: the set is designed in the manner of a bear pit, with the audience seated on rough wooden benches high above the stage. The wide main playing area features a central section of open grillwork, and is flanked by cobwebbed and gargoyled platforms; three more grillwork platforms rise above the stage floor. It is a brutal environment, a violent place, where doors fly open and fling chairs and other set pieces at you — all sharp edges. Everything makes noise, including the cast — this production is one of the few in this area recently which makes systematic use of alternate forms of non-vocal, human, sound production. The production is focused on the horror of a man going insane with the audience drawn into the center of Woyzeck's mind; although the production lacks the potential for intimacy of the Maine production, and is obviously not tourable, it achieves a great deal of power by virtue of its mass. The outstanding performances are given by Michael Guido, Paul Fitzgerald, and Jim O'Connell, as Woyzeck, the Captain, and the Doctor respectively. Guido is particularly fine, not only in his characterization, but in his movement — his falls and collapses provide some of the high points of the event. Patricia Riggin also does a creditable job as Marie, but her performance struck me as being somewhat underplayed.

Contrasting the two productions is an easy task — two more different approaches to the same script could hardly be imagined. Comparing the two with regard to effectiveness is a somewhat more difficult job — given the differences in approach, a straight comparison would be simply unfair. A couple of points can be made, however. The UMass production has the advantages of extensive technical support and critical research — not to mention the benefit of being presented in a familiar language. The absence of these factors had obviously hampered the German production. Moreover, the actors in the German production were far more exposed than those performing in the Studio — there's safety in numbers and in a huge performing environment. But even given these factors, it must be said that the UMass production is the better-realized of the two. The performance of the "Fahrende Schauspieltrüppe" was marked by many examples of lack of focus — the boundaries of the performing space were undefined, use of props was frequently sloppy, there were inconsistencies in the use of mime, and the ensemble seemed unable to decide on its relative size. While there are superfluous elements in the Studio production, its focus is clear and it achieved a great deal of power because of that. All in all, the current production of Woyzeck in the Studio Theatre is the most pioneering production mounted by the Theater Dept. to date — and well worth seeing.

Insane energy levels

by Marla Richmond

Marat-Sade. The play - and playwright, Peter Weiss, are capable of drawing very strong emotions from anyone. Peter Weiss never did anything half-way, his main interest in any of his plays is to tear your guts out. This play, more correctly titled, The persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by the Inmates of The Asylum of Charenton Under the Direction of the Marquis de Sade, is perhaps his best known. It is a rough play to watch and even a rougher one to play in: the entire cast of the London company played straight for six weeks before a complete collapse.

Hampshire College Theatre Department is mounting Marat-Sade under the direction of Liam O'Brien. Mr. O'Brien has acted in the play twice and believes in its power. I attended two rehearsals, including warm-ups, and came away totally amazed by the energy level. The ability of the performers to maintain concentration on craziness was unbelievable. I saw few breaks in character even though what I was watching was only a rehearsal.

The action of the play takes place in the shower room of the insane asylum 50 years after the assassination. The entire set is white. Director O'Brien explains this not only captures the shower room mood, but makes it easier to get dirty and show what the inmates are living in. The patients are dressed in ratty muslin uniforms that emphasize the difference between them and the well-dressed director of the clinic. The director is a perfect fat-assed liberal. He runs his clinic according to the most modern methods, and is most amused by the little play his charges come up with. He objects strongly when the topic of discussion by the characters go against what Napoleon now feels. As he states, "There is no question of anyone being oppressed."

The bizarre play is a strong political statement by the Marquis de Sade. Using insane asylum inmates allows him to get away with what he is doing. There are at times very thin lines between the illnesses of the "actors" and the "characters" they are playing. Marat was chosen to play his part because hydrotherapy worked for him and he was always in the bathtub anyway. His speeches carry more impact than just a looney reciting lines. There is definite conviction in his denouncements of assorted counter-revolutionaries.

The character who brings out most the idea of the insane being more sane than the "normals" is Jacques Roux. Roux was a priest who left the priesthood to back Marat. The "actor" is in a straight-jacket. His lines are not concerning the earlier revolution, but rather, the one he intends to start among the inmates. His "Long live freedom" is addressed to the director of the clinic. His pacing and anger back Marat's scenes with the impatience of any revolutionary becoming disgusted with the loss of zeal in his leader. He alone proves that oppression does indeed still exist. He delivers the line which sums the entire play: "When will you learn to take sides?"

This production is not for the weak of heart (or stomach). It is hard-biting, soul-searing drama. I highly recommend it. It is being performed in the Emily Dickinson Center for the Performing Arts at Hampshire, May 15-22 at 8:00 p.m.

"This land is your land" (for a price)

by Michael Roberts

Today will be a discussion about Indians. Everybody knows about Injuns — Indios, Indien, Indianer, Peaux Rouges. Half-breeds, Metis, Mestizos. Everyone knows us Injuns. The people that brought you tomatoes, corn, and moccasins — even Irish potatoes? You know us don't you? Those half-naked idiots who run around in the feathers and the groin-cloths? Always saying things like, Ugh! or How! or Injun hot cheatum land! You know us. We're the momzas that sold Manhattan Island for twenty-four dollars worth of trinkets and beads. Sure you know us. We're in your history books. You know, those stupid Indians. Sold the whole Island to Peter Minuet for twenty-four dollars. The Dutch got everything. The fishing rights, the land rights, the water rights, the hunting rights. They sold the color rights. Minuet's cousin, Nelson Coppertone, shelled out five dollars of the wampum for his cut of the action. But you know that. It's in your history books.

Remember that history class? That warm September day when you first learned about the Dutch colony? And teacher told you how the stupid redskins sell Manhattan at cut rate prices. Remember? Remember how you laughed? Ha, Ha, ha. Aren't white people clever. Got Manhattan for twenty-four dollars. Tell us about it again, teach! Ha, ha, ha, ha. Stupid Indians!

Well actually that is not what happened. The Indians that were living in the Manhattan area didn't own the land. It was owned and leased to them by Manitou. He was the big man. He's been inland development from way back. You might have heard of him. You know that place they set up a little while ago, the land of milk and honey? Yeah, he did that. So the Indians couldn't have sold Manhattan to Peter Minues. They didn't hold the title.

What happened was that Peter Minuet came ashore and said, "Hey man, we better buy this place before some Quaker becomes President and sends prices skyrocketing. Like we don't have much money, and life just isn't going to be the same around here much longer. Pretty soon you won't be able to fish and hunt, and grow food for nothing. Everyone will be buying at the supermarket. The dollar just won't be worth what it is now. Dig? Take this Island for instance. Today its worth only $21.50. Couple of hundred years from now inflation is going to raise the price to $8 or $9 zillion. So we better buy it before Nixon becomes President and messes everything up so he can appoint Rockerfeller emperor.

So here is Peter Minuet standing on Manhattan Island, looking for an Indian who'll sell before the stock exchange closes. He comes across two young bucks and offers them $21.50 for the whole island. Well this really cracks up those Indians, because Manitou owns the land, and these white folks think they're going to buy it from him. So the two Indians go back to their village and tell the story to the chief. This is what follows.

"Hey, chief! Come here! We have something important to tell you."

"Why, what's happening? Say, aren't you guys supposed to be fishing?"

Yeah, but some strange things have been happening down at the harbor. Really strange. First this 300 foot canoe pulls in the harbor and parks in a tow zone. But instead of using oars, this canoe has big white sheets on poles. And instead of rowing, the sheets catch the wind and the canoe just sort of glides across the water."

"The sheets catch the wind and the canoe glides across the water? Have you guys been eating those mushrooms again? I warned you about eating those mushrooms."

"No, no, we're straight man! This is real. After the canoe pulls into the harbor, these funny looking creatures with black suits take a small canoe and row ashore. Then they stick this flag in the ground and start doing some sort of weird ritual. We get a little closer to them so we can see what they're up to and then we see they have white skin! No shit!! White!! Well we're just about to get the hell out of there when one of them shoves some kind of stick in our backs and motions us towards the others. And you remember that weird guy Squanto? The one with the strange stories about a land across the ocean, and how he went there, and learnt that funny language? Well this guy starts talking to us in that funny tongue and tells us he's from across the ocean.

"Aw come on, you guys have been eating mushrooms again. The last time you told us a flying saucer landed and little green men got out and started...".

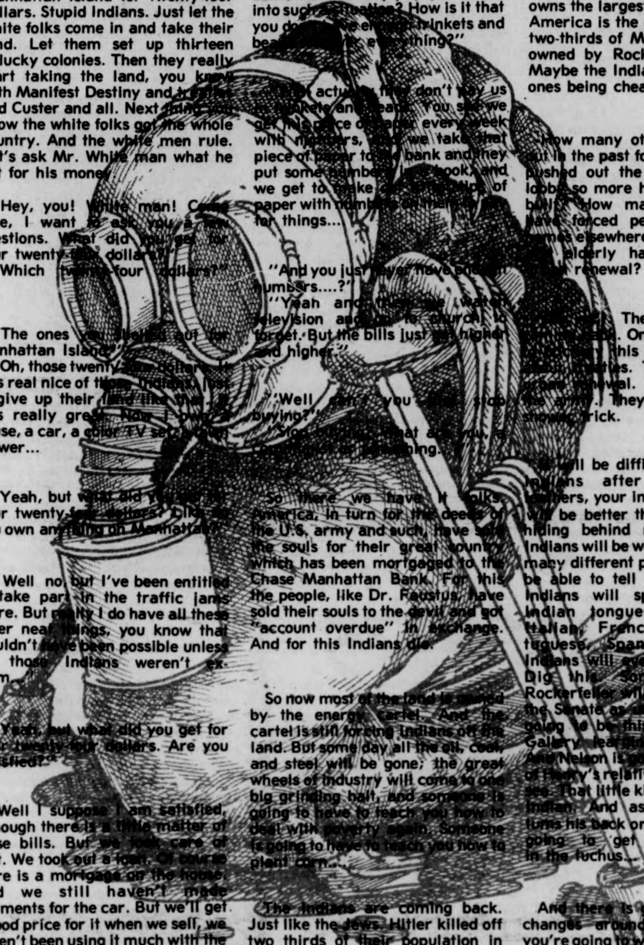
"No man, this real. After he tells us that he's from across the ocean he asks us if he can buy the island for $21.50. Can you imagine that? Buy the whole island for $21.50. Wait until Manitou hears this."

"Hmmm. Never mind Manitou. I have a better idea. You go back and tell them we'll sell the island."

"Are you crazy? We can't sell the island. Manitou will be bullshit. We can't go around selling Manitou's land."

"You know we can't sell Manitou's land. I know we can't sell Manitou's land. And Manitou knows we can't sell Manitou's land. But they don't know that. $21.50 is a lot of bread. It's not often we get offers like this. Besides just think of what those beads are going to be worth years from now. The English will be just dying to buy them. I can see it now, standing by the cow path on Fifth Avenue. "Psst...! Wanna buy some antique beads. Real Dutch made. By Peter Minuet. The Manhattan Island originals." We can sell millions. You dig? Look, you go back and you tell this Minuet fellow, we'll see Manhattan for $21.50. And tell him we'll throw in the Brooklyn Bridge for another two and a half bucks.

So, Manhattan island gets sold for $24 worth of trinkets and beads. And what happens? The English come over and tell the Dutch, that they're on English land. They tell the Dutch to pay the rent. But the Dutch can't pay the rent, so the English fire six cannonballs over their heads and the English get Manhattan from the Dutch without paying a dime.



So what's in the history books? Dumb fucking Indians sell Manhattan island for twenty-four dollars. Stupid Indians. Just let the white folks come in and take their land. Let them set up thirteen unlucky colonies. Then they really start taking the land, you know with Manifest Destiny and treaties and Custer and all. Next thing you know the white folks got the whole country. And the white men rule. Let's ask Mr. White man what he got for his money.

"Hey, you! White man! Come here, I want to ask you a few questions. What did you get for your twenty-four dollars?"

"Which twenty-four dollars?"

"The ones you shelled out for Manhattan Island."

"Oh, those twenty-four dollars. It was real nice of those Indians, just to give up their land like that. It was really great. Now I own a house, a car, a color TV set, a lawn mower...

"Yeah, but what did you get for your twenty-four dollars? Like do you own anything on Manhattan?"

"Well no, but I've been entitled to take part in the traffic jams there. But really I do have all these other neat things, you know that wouldn't have been possible unless all those Indians weren't exterm."

"Yeah, but what did you get for your twenty-four dollars. Are you satisfied?"

"Well I suppose I am satisfied, although there is a little matter of those bills. But we took care of that. We took out a loan. Of course there is a mortgage on the house. And we still haven't made payments for the car. But we'll get a good price for it when we sell, we haven't been using it much with the price of gas and all. But we'll make out. Our insurance premiums are paid up, although we had to take out another loan on the furniture. And soon as junior is out of school he'll get a good job and can pay off the loans for his education. But I make good money, well I was until I was laid off. They just came in one day and said, sort of screw, you know, fuck off. I should be going back to work soon. I was a little worried at first, especially when they were taking all the machinery out and sending back to the main plant in Michigan..."

"You said you're paid well, but you seem to be in great debt to the bank. How do they pay you to get into such a situation? How is it that you don't have enough trinkets and beads to buy everything?"

"Well actually they don't pay us in trinkets and beads. You see we get this piece of paper every week with numbers, and we take that piece of paper to the bank and they put some numbers in a book, and we get to make out little slips of paper with numbers on them to pay for things...

"And you just never have enough numbers....?"

"Yeah and then we watch television and go to church to forget. But the bills just get higher and higher."

"Well can't you just stop buying?"

"Stop buying. What are you, a Communist or something..."

So there we have it folks. America, in turn for the deeds of the U.S. army and such, have sold the souls for their great country which has been mortgaged to the Chase Manhattan Bank. For this the people, like Dr. Faustus, have sold their souls to the devil and got "account overdue" in exchange. And for this Indians die.

So now most of the land is owned by the energy cartel. And the cartel is still forcing Indians off the land. But some day all the oil, coal, and steel will be gone; the great wheels of industry will come to one big grinding halt, and someone is going to have to teach you how to deal with poverty again. Someone is going to have to teach you how to plant corn....

The Indians are coming back. Just like the Jews. Hitler killed off two thirds of their population in Europe, but they have been doing a lot of hava negiling in Tel Aviv lately. The Indians will make their comeback. Just wait.

Someday Manitou is going to come back and see the open strip mines, and the oil wells, and foreclosed mortgages. And then he's going to see the hunger, the poverty and the degradation. And as soon as he sees Rogers Morton and Earl Butz, you just know he's going to say, "Wow, what happened?" And there are going to be a few oil companies that will be paying their dues.

Did you know that group that owns the largest portion of land in America is the oil cartel? Or that two-thirds of Manhattan Island is owned by Rockerfeller interests. Maybe the Indians aren't the only ones being cheated out of land.

How many others were moved out in the past forty years? People pushed out the oil and highway lobby so more highways could be built? How many new airports have forced people to look for homes elsewhere? How many poor and elderly have displaced by urban renewal?

[illegible] The Indians will be coming back. Only they'll be wise [illegible] this time. They know about treaties. They know about urban renewal. They know about the army. They know about the shower trick.

It will be difficult to single out Indians after this. Without feathers, your image of the Indian will be better than camouflage or hiding behind rocks and trees. Indians will be wearing the faces of many different peoples. You won't be able to tell by the language. Indians will speak many non-Indian tongues like English, Italian, French, Polish, Portuguese, Spanish, etc. Some Indians will even speak Hebrew. Dig this. Some day Nelson Rockerfeller will be presiding over the Senate as usual. And there is going to be this little kid in the Gallery learning his Alpha-Bet. And Nelson is going to think its one of Henry's relatives. But its not you see. That little kid is going to be an Indian. And as soon as Nelson turns his back on him...Pfffft.....he's going to get an arrow right in the tuchus...

And there is going to be some changes around here. Someday you're going to walk by the campus pond and see a big bronze statue of Louise Day Hicks in a Nazi uniform, and the statue is going to be inscribed, "Legendary Spirit of the White Man." You wait. It will all change. And a lot of people will be paying dues.

Does anyone want to buy Manhattan Island?

EXCLUSIVE RELEASE TO BELOW THE SALT

NOTHING HELD BACK

RE: THE FINDINGS OF THE EUTHANASIA FOUNDATION OF AMERICA,

as reported by Steve Masse

CONCLUSION OF THREE PART SERIES

Last week in BELOW THE SALT, the Euthanasia Foundation of America reported on landmark experimentation on the subject of Abortion and Humanity. This third part deals primarily with Women's involvement in connection with the findings on Abortion.

Most people agree with the statement that women have a right to control their own bodies. Professional thinkers on the subject feel that the time has come in America for this Human right to be recognized and reinforced by Law.

Doctor Bill Bluebaird, Director of Research tor the Euthanasia Foundation of America, has disclosed that a man may also have this right, but that male Humans (over seven years mature) have considerable difficulty controlling even their digestive functions. When this fact was brought to light, a research team was immediately called together to investigate the full spectrum of the lack of bodily control of Human males in comparison to the full control ever present in Human females.[1]

The experiments were conducted at the Research Center for the Euthanasia Foundation of America at Haceldama, where five men and five women were hired on an equal payment basis, for research. The experiments were designed to cover basic bodily functions in three major steps, testing the control of Human females of their bodies as compared to the lack of control of Human males over their bodies.

The first step in testing bodily control was sandwich eating. Four out of the five males showed lack of bodily control — their saliva was not able to be stopped from flowing when the investigators advised.

The fifth man showed some control — he disliked tuna fish and did not eat it, thus his saliva did not flow.

However, among the females, all five showed the bodily control which has by strange evolution become complete in the Human female. Investigation results showed that all the females can turn their flow of saliva on or off at will; and that they can consciously control which parts of their bodies the digested food is relayed to for nourishment. It was evident in all five of the females that "production of protein from nucleotides was also easily controlled by conscious effort."[2]

The second step in studying bodily controls was the testing of blood. On command, none of the five males was able to speed up or slow down his rate of pulse. Yet the five females showed the expected result: they all were able to control their rate of pulse. The females even went a step further. They were able to control the flow of blood from a self induced skin cut at will.[3]

The third and final stage of the Investigation was a longer and more precise phase, for this part included the study of reproduction. Research scientists, having previously been informed that a woman has control over what goes into and out of her body, watched for signs which would further prove this information.

Since marriage is no longer a necessary or suggested factor in the forming of a Meaningful Relationship, the five females were paired off with the five males in the following manner with the following instructions:

The first couple was to go into one room and experience "love between brother and sister." The female was instructed to exert bodily control by causing her egg to become fertilized with not one, but fifteen sperm cells, then stop. The second couple was sent to a second room, the female was instructed to stop all sperm from invading the egg.[4] The third couple was sent to a third room, the female was instructed simply "don't get pregnant." Note the seeming similarity between instructions of couples two and three; yet there is a difference. One involves exertion of control only with respect to closing off the egg before the invasion of the sperm, the other involves simply not getting pregnant.

The fourth couple was sent to a fourth room, the female was instructed to allow the male to rape her in a male chauvinistic manner (that is, let him make the first moves).[5] The fifth couple was sent to a fifth room, with instructions to stand facing each other, without doing anything alse. This couple was to serve as a control group, thus the most attractive male and female were selected to comprise this couple.

THE RESULTS OF THE EXPERIMENT: The experiment was more than a success. The first female, instructed to allow fifteen sperm cells to invade the egg, claimed that she was concentrating so deeply on the height of love and respect in the meaningful relationship that she almost forgot to turn the egg off at fifteen. The result showed that the female is able to keep her egg open for any amount of sperm to invade — the egg is closed off at the will of the bearer.[6]

The second female, instructed not to allow a single sperm cell to invade the egg, reported that her rate of spermicidal enzymes was raised to a sufficient enough level to destroy all the sperm cells.[7]

The third female reported her part of the experiment as a total success. The male testified, "She kept telling me she'd love to, she'd love to, but she didn't want to risk getting pregnant. I know I have very slight control over my body, so if I made love with her she might become pregnant. So I told her that if she didn't want to get pregnant, to go Gay and use a dildo."[8]

The research scientists reminded him of his errors. They pointed out that the female did not necessarily have to become pregnant if she did not wish to, for her bodily control will of course have dictated whether or not she actually would get pregnant, and by what means the pregnancy would be prevented.

The fourth couple, the male of which was instructed to male chauvinistically rape the female by taking the initiative, reported success in totality. The male raped the female, and the female became pregnant. In this case the female exerted her ever present bodily control and caused herself to get pregnant. "I'm doing this mainly to see if I can get an Abortion for Rape somewhere besides in the big city, where the EFA oversees 17,000 of them each week (in the unborn to seven year old range). You see, I intended to test the justice of all hospitals, because so far very few hospitals other than those subsidized by the EFA recognize the right of women to control their own bodies. Of course we can blame this attitude on the Catholic Church — those archaic beliefs that the sub-seven-year old is Human." (Catholic Church precepts include the assumption that Human life begins at the completion of conception, and that nobody Male or Female has any right to interfere against that life. The EFA has proven that Human Life in fact begins at seven years after birth.)

At the time of this testimony, Dr. Betty Freewoman, research spokesperson for the EFA, entered the room and submitted a point for discussion. "There are still doctors who claim that a woman's right to control her body does not enter on controlling a Fetus. They claim without any factual background that a Fetus is a Human being and a separate individual. They should know better — every doctor in the nation was issued the findings of the EFA investigation of the question of Humanity. Of course we are aware that the Fetus is no more than a piece of the pregnant woman, with the worth of a fingernail — no more, no less."[9]

Ms. Freewoman stressed the fact that since a woman can consciously control her digestion, and since a woman consciously control where the nourishment goes after digestion, then the simplest solution to unwanted pregnancy is to rechannel the nourishment to exclude the embryonic area. This fact also further proves that the Fetus is just another part of the women's body.[10]

Meanwhile, findings on the fifth couple were being completed. As was expected, the male lost the little control over his body that he had, and allowed himself to become aroused sensually. The female, however, controlled her sexual appetite according to expectation, and reported that she did not even feel tempted to feel aroused.

The experiments proved beyond doubt that ninety-nine per cent of Human females (over seven years old) have rights and exercise them. The same experiment was repeated with the six chimpanzees that proved to the world that a sub-seven-year-old is not Human. The chimpanzees, during this mating season, were separated into three closely investigated couples. Neither the males nor the females showed bodily control. The result proves that this is what makes us Human — the fact that Humans can control whether or not they get pregnant without mechanical aids. Chimpanzees can not control this factor.[11]

SATISFIED PEOPLE TESTIFY: Testimony has also served to prove that the investigation results by the EFA are correct and accurate. One woman whose choice it was to change her mind about her three year old sub-human said, "Before he came to the Euthanasia Foundation for sleep therapy he used to cry a lot, but after the doctors took care of him he sees nothing more that makes him sad. And now I can continue my education without that kind of interruption." This proves that women now have choices, thanks to the EFA.

Another woman, who chose to make full advantage of the termination of her five-year-old sub-human, testified, "You know them people livin' in the Third World, they really starvin', so I had my sub-girl soaked in that pickle stuff and sended it off to a country somewheres like it said in the ad — as a food commoditary. I hate to think o' people dying and hungry, you know."

Another satisfied patron testified, "My 8½ month Fetus let out a cry when it was being flushed — but I had to do lots of things I didn't want to do when I was young. My husband went along with me all the way. We've been looking forward to this trip to Bermuda for a long time." This shows that women who were previously under some outside control were helped to take control of themselves and of what goes into and out of their bodies, thanks to the Euthanasia Foundation of America.

Not that it has been proven scientifically that women have rights and exercise them, there is a choice to make: To accept the Facts...

"Play all night! We need the music!"

by M.C.P. Kostek II

In Concert:
Sha Na Na
Aztec Two-Step
Webster Lewis
11 May 1975
Alumni Stadium, UMass

Now, wasn't that fun? Even with all the rain and assorted miseries (like the temperature going from 75 to 61 in 15 minutes), last Sunday's show was the finest "Spring Concert" we've had yet (not counting the Boz Scaggs — James Taylor — Al Kooper informal frolic of 1971). Better than the Fleetwood Mac— McKendree Spring — Ashton, Gardner, Dyke & Co. 1972 fizzle, the yawn that was Cold Blood — It's A Beautiful Day — Bruce Springsteen in 1973 and certainly last year's Aerosmith-Elliot Murphy debacle (see what happens when you tempt the fates? Justice and Art live!)

A nice day and a nicer atmosphere prevailed for long enough for all to exercise their frisbee chops and future beach sunbathing positions. While there was a noticeable lack of any distinctly odd activity for the day (the gent with the paper bag hat, the other traveler with the two cans of Coors Beer, and the "707" tri-sign in the crowd were the modest winners), there was a more genteel reserve in this crowd that any other large UMass concert gathering recent times. Only a few beer cans became airborne, and just a few "Lookitertits!" rang out. Best line of the day was that of the mentally demolished Sha Na Na nut who wormed (elephanted, actually) her way through the show fence in front of the stage in rage at not being chosed for the Dance Contest. But once inside, she was entranced. "Play all night!", she croaked to the neo-greasers, "We need the music!"

Winner of the Dance Contest ("Couple numba Too") was Colleen McLevedgee, 16½, Bronx High, who dedicated her victory to "my parents, Mom & Dad", and said her goal in life was to "help people".

Unjustly lost in the squeegee was Aztec Two-Step, a normally — neglected acoustic duo that sing songs that must be listened to to be appreciated. Following Webster Lewis' big funk-jazz was a problem, but so was playing in a concrete stadium to people on a quite active holiday. Perhaps mercifully, the rains came, and washed away their set after eight songs. Rex Fowler (the fuzzy-headed one) is their main singer and writer. I chatted with him briefly before their show about the miles and tribulations of being unknown for so long.

It seems they've been "Aztec Two-Step" for four years now, and have but one album out, that on Elektra. "We had a lot of trouble with them, which isn't worth going into. They didn't hear any hits in our music. They just put the album out and didn't push it at all. I'm not talking about hype, necessarily, but just getting people to know your name."

No, no hits, and even though Aztec Two-Step has sold over 25,000 on little airplay, good press and word of mouth, the Aztecs now are signed to RCA.

"Shit floats. You find so many people in this business who are really nothing creatively and make a lot of money — Olivia Newton John, Mac Davis, The Carpenters. I don't know...It's getting harder and harder to get around these days, with AM down to about a top 15 songs and many many FM stations going to a top 50 albums format. It used to be that FM would be really progressive, playing a lot of different things. No more. You have to be known first."

Aztec Two-Step will remain two people (the bass player with them Sunday was hired for the tour) until things change. "We'll be recording in June for an album in the fall. There'll be a full band on it, and if we ever get enough money, we'll be able to hire a band to tour with, to give us a fuller sound. Right now we can't afford it."

Aztec Two-Step has apparantly been making music unsuitable for the music machine that gives (gives?) us our music. Rex Fowler is a little too thoughtful, a little too concerned with his own integrity, too conscious of the jive involved with Success to do it the easy way.

UMass lets its freak flag fly a bit again.

by Jim Paulin

They all came down, from the towers and horizontal slabs of Southwest and various other encapments to the North and East. In shorts and halters and no shoes, plus yards and yards of blankets for a long hot bivouac on the best kept lawn on campus surrounded by a concrete seating apparatus.

The blankets were spread out to cover the skin not getting tanned, until the rain came and the bottom padders became emergency tents. Meanwhile, hundreds of others responded to the subteranean stadium's plea of "give me your huddled masses," and stood and squatted in the dryness under the seats until the rain made its way through the bleacher drains and caught the dry ones. A minority completely disregarded the rain, and frisbees continued to sping past the North scoreboard. I thought the precipitation might prevail, it was announce that it was dry in Northampton, and the dryness was headed in our direction.

The sun began its second act, the huddled masses returned en masse, faster than they had retreated; blankets came off the heads and returned to their normal prone positions.

"So nobody gets fried," the concert committee spent about half an hour sweeping and mopping water of the stage and striped canopy, towel drying the wires and cables and finally, sprinkling powder on the stage to exterminate the last bit of dampness. In the interlude, we listened to packaged music, just like we do in our rooms. Meanwhile, in the crowd, two dogs faced off, growling, and would have tangled if they hadn't been leashed. Near the restraining fence was a small group of hardcore Sha-Na-Na fans, with grease encaked jeans and arms reinforced by tatoos.

"Good afternoon, ladies and greasers." With the late afternoon sun overhead, and the audience squinting at the stage, Sha-Na-Na came on, trading middle fingers with the crowd. 10-15 females rode piggyback above the audience, one with a camera for an unobstructed shot at the elevated stage.

Three women were selected from the crowd for a dance concert. The popularly judged winner, the one with the pants ripped at the lower right cheek, earned a slow dance with "The sensuous Leonard J. Baker," a saxophone-playing goateed blimp.

It was probably a judicious decision to make the "The 1975 Stadium Concert" a brown bag (ice chest, actually) affair, but alas, on that hedonistic May afternoon, I got thirsty and asked a well-stocked cooler if he was willing to perform an act of charity, but he declined, saying "I've been turning them down all afternoon."

"Singing Ink" puts it in everyone's mouth

What's the future in Soap Operas?

Soap Opera
THE KINKS
(RCA LPL1-5081) time 37:24

Ray Davies' version of a Walter Mitty-rock star fantasy is interesting in spots (the "Everybody is a star" concept of the fleeting, elusive quality of that peculiar condition, the fine performance by June Ritchie as the sadly helpless, and co-opted yet truly loving wife, and the great "Ducks On The Wall"), but Ray's been noodling around with these ideas, both musical and lyrical, for some time now. Whether this is one-more variational run-through or the Final Wrap for this situation, Soap Opera never shakes its (The Kinks) glorious past to present any sort of real future.

A workman-like C+.

Native Dancer
WAYNE SHORTER
(Columbia Records)

Quite an interesting excursion for Shorter, who for a moment there looked as though he was going to be sucked in to the "funkier, more rhythmically-oriented" direction that his part-time group, Weather Report appears to be taking.

Here we have four Americans (including Herbie Hancock and Dave McDaniel) and four Brazilians (including Nachimento on vocals) each contributing his share towards creating a group sound akin to what can only be described as that of a more melodically advanced Carlos Jobim (you remember "Girl from Ipanema".

Nachimento wields a mighty voice that keeps one from even noticing many times there aren't any lyrics to be sung.

Shorter takes his obligatory solo on "Diana", and several times more throughout the album, but generally feels contented to stay behind with the rest of the group, sometimes playing along with the rhythm section, sometimes playing in unison or call-response methods with piano, organ or Nachimento's guitar. Airto Moriera's presence is felt throughout, the five tunes he performs on. Hancock contributes one tune, but his playing is also noticably understated.

Nice. B

Playing Possum
CARLY SIMON
(Elektra Records)

All of side one is not at all different from the songs that got her started, so here's reassurance to all her fans. She seems to beg for sincere feelings and direct honesty in the manner of one on the threshold of discovering the reality of life. Among the best of these are "After the Storm" and "Look Me in the Eyes". However, after "Attitude Dancing", the opening cut of side two, it all gets back to you. Reading the words to those songs, you figure out that she did not get what she was out after on the preceding side and becomes somewhat apathetic. But after all, isn't that the regular human reaction? All of which brings us to the title cut, a sum total of all the impressions revealed to us on this disc.

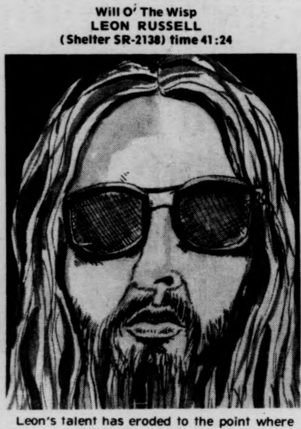
Will O' The Wisp
LEON RUSSELL
(Shelter SR-2138) time 41:24



Leon's talent has eroded to the point where the most we can hope is that he'll provide a few pleasant moments and not be too overbearing. Will O' The Wisp is more consistent than the gaping Stop All That Jazz, but there are still none of the moments of true delight he gave previously. Either he's not trying or has exhausted all his tricks.

Old Fashioned Love
JOHN FAHEY
(Takoma Records)

Another superb work from the master of American folk guitar. John performs duets on side one and plays with some spunky oldtime jazz tooters on side two, and in the process takes the listener on a musical journey that seems to run the gammut of human emotions. One minute he's got you feeling melancholy, then mischievous, then blue. Subtlety invades the music; Fahey insinuates rather than being obvious. That's certainly not to say that the man is pretentious. Herein lies some of the most enjoyable, accessible goodtime chickin'pickin, blues and Fahey foolishness you're ever bound to witness. John goes from reworking an Indian folk tune to shining on ole Mississippi Fred McDowell's "Keep Your Lamps Trimmed and Burnin" so deftly and smoothly that one hardly notices the transition. There's a deceptive feel of simplicity in much of Fahey's playing; upon further inspection one realizes that this hardly denotes any lack of technique or complexity. Rather, Fahey plays effortlessly; his technique isn't some well thought out master plan; the notes, the intricate rhythms and delicate inflections flow spontaneously from his fingers. Fahey's the type of guitarist that cannot be imitated. Someone else might play his songs or his type of music, but nobody can play like him. Graceful is the one word I use to describe his work.

There's really no sense in me singling out cuts from the album, because it's all great fun. But let me just note that some of Benny Goodman's old cohorts give John some rollicking assistance on side two. Anyone can become enchanted with this disc. 11 on a scale of 10.

IAN HUNTER
(Columbia Records)

Great Mott, what's this? Ian Hunter, Mr. M. the H., has a solo out! It's about time that he made the change, because he was becoming stifled in that band. Hunter's teamed up with able guitarist and producer Mick Ronson to churn out something we've needed all year: a good $6.98 Anglorock album. No derision intended. Ian rocks with style, while Bowie "gets down" and Bad Company continues to put its bowel movements on vinyl. What is more, Ian succeeds in making a personal statement, something he always craved but never fully realized while in Mott.

The music of Ian Hunter continues in the proud tradition of Mott the Hoople at its freshest, its raunchiest. A nice alternative to all the pretentious gunk floating out of the record bins. The man simply entertains.

The Rotter's Club
HATFIELD AND THE NORTH
(Virgin V2030) (Import)

"You can imagine my delight was like some R. Crumb magazine come to life" — P. Pyle in "Fitter Stoke has a Bath"

I think that pretty well sums up my attitude towards this wonderful wax — This is a band that's gonna have trouble making it in the U.S.: Not only are they great, which is practically the kiss of death in itself, but they go about their greatness with subtlety and (Good Lord!) humility (not to mention humor), two qualities which are so rare in popular music as to be almost unrecognizable to the majority of listeners. Yes, I said popular music; you know, guitars, drums bass, keyboards, even vocals. Popular as in extremely listenable; this is not just critics' music.

Hatfield and the North
THE ROTTERS CLUB

Like some R. Crumb come to life

...And the Soft Machine begat Robert Wyatt's Matching Mole, which begat Hatfield and The North. The Hatfields sound a little like early Soft Machine, a little like Zappa (Hot Rats phase) but mostly they are like neither, with a much lighter sound than you might expect from a band drawing on those particular sources. This lightness is deceptive, extremely so. Repeated listenings are increasingly rewarding, as the first couple of times through you are like to be caught up in the sheer bounce of it all, not noticing that behind the easy friendliness and rolling — and rocking — melodies (Remember melodies, Nellie?) lurks a creativity and virtuosity that borders on the amazing. The tricky changes and soaring solos are woven so smoothly into the fabric of their arrangements that it's not even exciting to notice them: they're there because they belong there, rather than simply as proof of the musicians' competence. And speaking of the arrangements, Guest star names to drop include the very wonderful Jimmy Hastings on flute and saxes, plus Lindsay Cooper (oboe and bassoon) and Tim Hodgkinson (clarinet) of the much-crazed band Henry Cow

All of the above (except for the guest stars, of course) goes for their first album as well. Hatfield and the North (Virgin VR 13-110), which has been released in this country. I hope that The Rotter's Club will be also, as it is one of the best albums to be released anywhere this year.

A "How many groups do you know of that have titled one of their cuts after a line from a Monty Python album ("Your Majesty is Like a Cream Donut")?" (A+)

The Hard driving' Blues of ROOSEVELT SYKES
(Delmark DL-607) 32:36

Don't believe this LP's title. It's about as hard drivin as an intro psych lecture. Now I'm not gonna dump on Roosevelt Sykes as I'm not real familiar with his work in the 30's and 40's. But this album, and record companies in general, should be notified that it's open season.

My basic complaints are Sykes' voice and piano playing (what else is there?). His voice has no texture (he was 57 in '63 when this was recorded), and it scratches and strains as he hits the high notes or tries to be more forceful. This in itself doesn't have to be disasterous but, unfortunately, his hands also seem tired, even on his boogie woogie pieces.

The combination of these two weaknesses (plus the fact that Homesich James Williamson is supposed to be on some of the cuts, but if you can hear him, it's worth a quarter...that's not much...that's not much of a record) has the effect of an open circuit breaker. There is no merging of Sykes' emotions with ours.

Just a word (well, maybe not just one) about recording companies and this type of disc. This LP consists of sessions done 12 years ago. They are old and, at best, mediocre tapes.

My complaint (today's) about record companies (ya listening gang?) is that they are not half as willing to take chances on new jazz, and particularly, new blues performers as they are in the pop field. Admittedly new bluesmen seem to be few, but is that because they are not there? These companies prefer to turn out old, uninspired and even poor tapes of established "stars" rather than to take a chance on someone new.

Although blues is especially getting a raw deal, this practice is universal. In rock we get "Hendrix's newest LP". In jazz we are getting Sun Ra'd and Coltraned to death. And with the blues it's typical that every LP I've reviewed for the Salt has either been a re-issue or a "new" release of an old tape.

I don't know if writing your congressman — woman would help, but I thought I'd say it cause you won't have Wichita to kick around anymore.

Judith
JUDY COLLINS
(Elecktra 7E-1032)

What could be better for a solitary afternoon than a Judy Collins album? The voice that can just blow you away. Only three original songs on this one, but there are some really nice things done with other people's creations.

Two songs, "Send In The Clowns" (from the broadway play, A Little Night Music) and "I'll Be Seeing You" (copyright 1938), sounded like some Julie London stuff my parents listened to a forever ago. These were just too polished and orchestrated for what I expect from Judy Collins. A whole orchestra really is not necessary when the singer has a voice like that, but I suppose some would think it only enhances her.

"City of New Orleans" is currently in vogue to record and Judy did a good version of it. She has never been afraid of singing "tough" songs, but it still amazes me every time I hear a sweet soprano singing heavy Janis Joplin type words. Oh, our sex role training.

This is a good album. The lady can do some nice stuff, as she has proven again and again. Almost completely devoid of Politics, it still comes off as something positive to listen to.

Looking for the real Soul

by Craig — Sound o' Soul — Roche

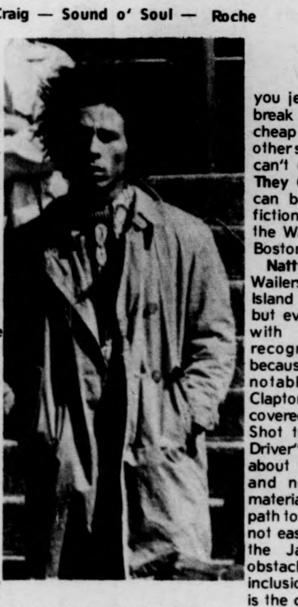
Natty Dread
BOB MARLEY AND THE WAILERS
(Island)

Whither Soul music? When I was 16 and had my ear attached primarily to the good years of WBZ AM radio, I grew up with little input from Motown and Stax, etc. The Temps, the Supremes, of course, but it wasn't until Sam and Dave burned my ears that I really felt touched by Soul music. Today (Jezis Mike, almost 10 years gone) I am looking for Soul music again. Where is it? The rhythm and beat of the stuff is still around but all gone to disco funk, but that's not Soul. Soul is just that, it grabbed you (you had no choice) and said "listen here, mutha". You don't need your soul to Bump, only your ass. Diana split and does glossy wax, a latter day Warwicke, and, the Temps do songs for the sake of intricate rhyme schemes. All we're left with is Stevie, thank God for him. Jimi's dead, Otis is dead, you almost have to die to keep your soul intact.

True soul music was bred as a reaction to hostility and repression. It came from the black person's experience but because it is, like blues and jazz, a mirror of life's conditions inate to all humankind, it has the marvellous capacity to touch all of us.

It is precisely those conditions that have bred reggae music on the island of Jamaica. There the average black man is consigned to a life of gross subservience, living off the commerical service of the tourist (upper-middle class, primarily white) crowd to which the black man must humble himself. And reggae is as violent and real a reaction to that way of life as anything can be. I mean, reggae artists have trouble getting passports to leave the country...don't want to export no revolution.

For a crash course into the soul of reggae, there really is no finer method than seeing the life of the Rasta-men on the island of Jamaica. Next time you jet down there for Spring break or winter session, rent a cheap motor bike and see the other side of the island. Or if you can't do that, see The Harder They Come the next time you can because so little of it is fiction. Or see Bob Marley and the Wailers if they ever get to Boston again.



Bob Marley Of the Wailers: "You liven up yourself because reggae is no drag"

Natty Dread is the third Wailers album to be released by Island Records in this country, but even if you are unfamiliar with the band, you might recognize their material because other artists, most notably Johnny Nash, Eric Clapton, and Taj Mahal have covered it (with "Stir it Up", "I Shot the Sheriff", and "Slave Driver", in that order). It is about time that the real stuff and not second generation material be recognized. But the path to the source of this soul is not easy, (could it be?) Initially the Jamaican dialect is an obstacle, one overcome by the inclusion of the lyrics. Secondly is the close relationship reggae shares with the religion of many Jamaicans called Ras Tafarianism. For a far better explanation than I can give here, see a Rolling Stone of about a year ago that gets into great detail.

Boiling in this musical pot is the mysticism of the rasts faith, the repression these people live with, and the choking-strong Jamaican dope they smoke to get out of the hassles. And to shake one's ass to the bass beat, Rock Steady, of good reggae. "You lively up yourself cause reggae is no drag." This is Soul music, it comes from deep in the soul of writer Bob Marley and through the music of the Wailers. Through the course of this album, Marley reflects upon life in Trenchtown (a Government built urban slum of shacks), the plight of the poor ("Them belly full but we hungry") and of the revolution to come ("where it takes a revolution to make a solution"). Get into the Wailers and Reggae, and see on what side of the coming revolution you stand. Besides, you CAN bump your ass off to it.

Together
PETE SEEGER
(Reprise)

Pete Seeger and Arlo Guthrie, two ends of the great American folk tradition and close friends through Arlo's father, Woody, joined together on the concert tour for a short, six date show. This album culled from four of the shows gives a representative testimony to both the good music and the good feelings that went down at the shows. Rarely have I heard a live album that so captured the essence of the performers work. The Allman Bros. Live at Fillmore East is another one, but to get that down was an easier task because the Allmans' style was live boogie and jamming, not studio: the Seeger-Guthrie style is a much more delicate element. Now that Woody is dead, Pete Seeger embodies the folklore tradition, that blend of Dust-bowl Okie depression blues, English sea shanties, union radicalism, and leftist politics. This distillation of grass roots, Populist American sentiment is such a potent force that ogres the likes of Joe McCarthy succeeded in blacklisting this fine man from performing in the radio-TV media until the Smothers Brothers had the courage to have him appear on their long past summer show. To couple this man's persona with Arlo, who has inherited Woody's legacy along with the name, could not fail to assure success. This album proves it.

PROMOTIONAL COPY NOT FOR SALE
Pete & Arlo
Seeger & Guthrie

Folk music for people

I can't claim to be an impartial judge of this album, having lived with it for two weeks. As a good live album must do, this makes me wish I had been there. But all the good feeling that the audiences were bathed in comes through on the album. Arlo does a number of his best and favorite tunes, and Seeger's charm and sense of style overwhelm this listener. Each man performs some solo stuff, but the best is the collaborative singing and playing. Arlo's guitar opposite Pete's banjo, their joyous voices joined in a light-hearted yodeling duet.

This is a double album, had to be, to include just a portion of the concrete, and therefore is not cheap, but is worth every penny spent on it. The last few words of liner notes ring very true. "It is another time, but the need for Seegers and Guthries of whatever generation remains," I only hope that such people will always appear to meet that need.

America's Choice
HOT TUNA
(Grunt BFL1-0820)
Total Playing time: 44:36

This is a good solid power trio album, and therein lie its strengths and weaknesses. America's Choice provides a classic example of artistic inbreeding. Although the songs (primarily by Jorma Kaukonen) show a fair amount of variety in composition, every song is treated in exactly the same manner: multitracked leads with little interplay between them, a somewhat muddy mix, most every song taken at the same tempo, and every song used as a vehicle for extended soloing (the shortest song is 4:23; the longest is 6:52). In other words, it can wear pretty thin after a while; Kaukonen, Casady, and Steeler seem to have closed themselves off from any other fertilizing musical influences.

On the other hand, maybe you like this kind of thing. Kaukonen has a pleasing voice, if not much of a range; the instrumental work is competent throughout, and much of the soloing is quite fine; a couple of the songs have a fair amount to recommend them. "Funky No. 7" features some nice contrapuntal work and the best mix, with leads popping out here and there; "I Don't Wanna Go" contains some interesting death lyrics, much like Dan Hicks' "It's Not My Time To Go". So it isn't as though the album is absolutely irredeemable. Just that Hot Tuna need to open some more doors — a couple more albums and this stuff will be unbearably stagnant.

THE BRECKER BROTHERS
(Arista Records)

Randy and Mike Brecker, what's got to you?

What happened to the good old days when you took it upon yourselves to consistently blast out the high points as studio musicians for other recording dates? What happened to the unassuming contributions you folks made to the musician's answer to Blood Sweat and Tears? What happened to the straight ahead, no-nonsense performances you both put down on Randy's solo venture, Score?

Aside from one fine composition, entitled "Oh My Stars" that sticks its head above all the over-produced, trite "fonky" stuff, I get the feeling most of this material was instigated by Arista and its attempt to fill the ever-expanding phenomenon called the "Billy Cobham-Chick Corea-Headhunters Market".

They both can still blow like bitches, though. C.

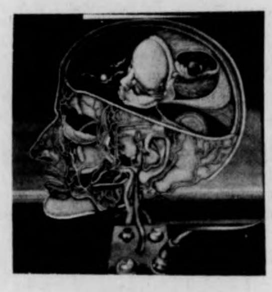
Clearlight Symphony
CYRILLE VERDEAUX
(Virgin V2029) (Import)

Contrary to what the title might have led you to expect, there is (Say Halleleujah!) no symphony orchestra connected with this record; in fact there are only four people on each side. And that's fine with me, I've had it with symphony-rock, symphony-jazz, symphony-jazz-rock and symphony-anything. In a vague way, this record is symphonic, or at least orchestral, in structure, but that whole concept implies limitations that aren't really present on this album. Let's just say it's orchestral in a manner similar to the original — not the orchestral — Tubular Bells. And the comparison is an apt one, as Virgin records in England obviously has hopes that Clearlight symphony will follow in T. Bells' successful footsteps (It's still in the top 20 in England), judging by the amount of publicity they're giving it, including, at one point, having almost every record store in England playing the album at a given time on the same day.



Music that curves in on itself

Could be, could be. Clearlight Symphony sounds, as I said something like T. Bells, lots of interweaving themes, lots of overdubs. But Clearlight embraces a much wider space; there is a lot more daring and a lot more real musicianship, rather than just studio 'virtuosity', particularly on Side 1, where Verdeaux (grand piano, organ, mellotron, synthesized bass) is assisted by three members of the incredibly talented and whacky group, Gong: Tim Blake (synthesizer and percussion), Steve Hillage (guitar), and Didier Malherbe (tenor sax). Hillage in particular rips out some hair-raising adventures from his instrument; in fact that whole album side should be classified as potentially dangerous.

Side two is Verdeaux with a different line-up of musicians; I don't recognize the names (Christian Boule, guitar; Gilbert Artman, drums, vibraphone, and percussion; Martin Isaacs, bass) but the over-all effect is just not as potent, a bit too much repetition and simply not as much reaching out. But even so, both sides are good music for those wee morning hours when you're thinking about how the universe curves in on itself. In other words, friends, there's space music and space music, and this is space with a lot of room in it (what?). For you. Side 1 (A), Side 2 (B)

—Your Sacred Cowboy

Together Alone
ANTHONY BRAXTON & JOSEPH JARMAN
(Delmark DS-428)

Beautiful album, with a wide sweep of style and emotion that leaves me more and more impressed each time I spin it.

The entire force on here is Braxton & Jarman on assorted saxes, flutes and electronic favor flavors. It's the burst of electronic swirls in the opening cut (the well-known "CK7 (GN) 436") that is most intriguing. Braxton is one of the few black musicians to experiment in sounds other than his wind instrument. Instead of relying solely on his sax for all the squeaks and squawks, he turns to the power of the studio with its infinite possibilities in the tape decks and synthesizers. "CK7 (GN) 436" is a deft laying on of rough electronics by Anthony, over his and Jarman's (who spends most of his hours with the Art Ensemble of Chicago, perhaps the most strident musical group in existence) "normal" playing. Amazing effect.

Most of the record is more conventionally drawn, and while they get a bit stale on Braxton's "SBN-A-1 66K", it's a beautiful job on side two, Jarman's "Together Alone", and "Down Dance".

"Morning (Including Circle)" finishes up, being a human swirl of chants and hypnotic noise that completes our journey, from machine to man.

A great record, with more width and depth than most anything you'll find for a while.

A "There's so much!" A.

Katy Lied
STEELY DAN
(ABC)

This is the fourth album from the group that many people feel is the current contender for that elusive title of best white rock band. Five years ago there would have been any number of groups vying for that place, but today Steely Dan has it both because they have earned it and also from a lack of competition. You have your glitter rock, blues rock, jazz rock, folk rock, on and on, but few folks "just" rock. These guys do with a consistency and freshness that does set them apart from more trendy and less substantial bands.

Can't Buy a Thrill, Dan's first album yielded their first hits and established many approaches and themes they continue to explore today. That cover and general attitude depicted the sleaze and neon of L.A., its cheap thrills and decadence. Within the tracks of Katy Lied, composer-arrangers Donald Fagen and Walter Becker turn their attention to the economic collapse of the world (in "Black Friday"), pornography ("Everyone's Gone to the Movies"), life in concrete cities ("Daddy Don't Live in New York City No More" and "Throw Back the Little Ones").

Their lyrics are both witty and pointed, and if they don't make a lot of sense, they make great puns — the best perhaps from "Boddhisattva" off their second album — "Show me the sparkle of your China, the shine of your Japan." Over the course of their four albums, Steely Dan have created a distinctive and identifiable sound, a jazzy blend of rhythm and unexpected instrumentation. Witness the guitar solos on all the albums: "Rikki Don't Lose That Number" is a good example. On Katy Lied, the sax work sneaks in and out of the tunes oh so sweetly, a touch as frugal but necessary to the end product as vermouth is to that perfect martini.

With the exception of Donald Fagen's lead vocals, there is no real sense of personal identification with Dan members. Each album has had a cast of a dozen or more musicians who perform like a platooned football team, every one has a specialty performed when called into the game. This album boasts seven guitarists and three keyboard players. As to who plays what hot licks we'll never know. The back cover features photos of seven men, and lists 21 names. This is, of course, exactly as the band wishes it to be. As they move closer to stardom, Steely Dan will have no stars. But they will make more good music

The music you're not supposed to hear

"THE NUTS"

by Mike Kostek II

"I hope there'll be a day when you'll be able to get this music for free. It didn't cost me anything where I got it." — Captain Beefheart.

You can get real romantic about it: there, far off, way down past the point where they call anything South we go. Down down to the misstepped plains, where the wind goes free with no skycrapers to wizz around. Freely giving to all who nose too close to its baggage of violence, Texas has long fostered a culture of independence, bravery and bullheadedness. At least that's what we read about. More likely it's the perfect stage for some giant egos in search of identity and-or amplification, and it comes down to us as strong. The people there have it sorted out (they guess) to what they are supposed to be. But this also lit the way for what was not allowed, as friends Joplin, Ornette Coleman, Boz Scaggs, Doug Sahm et al. will tell us. So it is that a bootlegger of rare tapes, inbetween scraping the dead armadillo guts off his tires and slurping Lone Star beer...

Quat? a lead-in like that slop-headed marsh for my last Below the Salt feature? Not on your life. Steve Feld would never have begun like that. "These ears have never heard.." he'd say. But, as long as you're here, it means that it didn't get rid of all of you completely, and you others (not you, them!) must be, ah, new. Well, I'm just setting a little rum afloat for a look at a rare tapes bootlegger. On with it? On with what?

Or you could be a reporter-reviewer — "These tape things are to these ears, highly amusing, but distressing in their similar covers. They all look alike — 'Exhibo'. In other news..."

But we're here. And hear is what I've done with a few of the items in the Texas bootlegger's catalogue, whom we will call Mr. Tex, but is in reality Mike Tannehill, 2932 Softwind Trail, Fort Worth, Texas, 76116.

Frank Zappa: captured by the bootleggers

Mr. Tex deals in tapes of concerts, unreleased studio material, interviews and sundried oddities (hot in Texas). None of these things have seen commercial release, nor are they likely to. They exist not for profit (in most cases) but for fans. Nuts. Crazies. Mr. Tex deals in 8-track, cassette and reel-to-reel at reasonable prices ($4-$5). He works with a catalogue of over 400 tapes, and will swap your own home-spun concert tapes for some of his items. Here is a quick look at some of the man's products:

King Crimson — Texas Hall, Arlington, Texas, 6 Oct. 1973. As you may have noticed, Fort Worth is Mr. Tex's base, and many of his tapes are personally made from area's halls. This Crimson one is 60 minutes long and captures this odd band on a good evening as they whipsaw stuff like "Larks' Tongues In Aspic" (both parts), "21st Century Schizoid Man" and "Easy Money", A-.

Frank Zappa & The Mothers of Invention — Texas Hall, Arlington, Texas, 11 March 1973. Clear sound, good crowd, but the something lacking on here is definitely consistency of the part of the Mothers. This is the Brock-Humphries - Ponty-Ruth Underwood band, and they were prone to playing easy tricks on and around the music without delivering the guts often enough. Which is why Zappa's last three albums aren't as fulfilling as his other work.

George Dukes extended solo (ten-minutes) points up the problem concisely — super, fleet runs that go nowhere but into stupid, obvious stretches of boring self-indulgence. Still, Frank always produces a clutter of interesting sounds, and this is no exception. It's just that there are less here than usual. B-.

Frank Zappa & The Mothers Of Invention — Historical Recordings, 1962-68. A tape the type of which any real Zappa fan dreams of. Originally supplied by a Zappaoligist who runs the Zappa Archives in Switzerland, this is an incredible document of Frank's early recordings of note, including "I Was A Teenage Maltshop", the first real rock opera, and narrated by Capt. Beefheart. There's other items such as the Mothers' first demo, their first show in Hollywood as well as some of the sessions for other people (like the Hollywood Persuaders) that Zappa wrote and-or arranged and-or produced and-or played on. And as the topper, this tape was recorded while Frank, Wild Man Fischer, some GTO's and Zappa family were listening, and we hear Zappa narrate the whole deal as well as the comments from those present. The sound is understandibly removed, but this will do nicely until Frank's nine record No Commercial Potential comes out. A-.

Traffic-Tarrant County Convention Center, Fort Worth, Texas, 19 Jan. 1973. Mr. Tex said he doesn't like to send 8-tracks through the mail because they get mussed up often. He was right here, as this Traffic set worked to slowly and wobbily to listen to.

Little Feat — Tarrant County Convention Center, Fort Worth, Texas, 12 Oct. 1974. Here's the Feat when they were still opening shows, on a slightly off night. The band gets to peak form on a few numbers, but the fact that Lowell George's guitar and vocals are consistently behind the rhythm section does no good. B-.

Dr. John — Aragon Ballroom, Dallas, Texas, 11 April 1974. This tape is from a stereo broadcast by a station in Texas from the Aragon Ballroom, and we learn all about the club and station as the first seven minutes on here are the "I think the Doctor's ready now...No? Well, soon, Next week we'll have..." kind. If you get past that, you'll find a rough mix and a guarded show by the Gris-gris man, though some of the later songs work it until everyone gets wild. C-.

Pink Floyd — Ahoyhatten, Rotterdam, Holland, 13 Nov. 1967. Item of interest here to Floyd nuts, as this was recorded when Syd Barrett was with them. Sound is fair, performances likewise. C-.

Blood, Sweat & Tears — Mahavishnu Orchestra — Bruce Springsteen. This is a King Biscuit Flower Hour concert broadcast of last year, and is captured well. Blood, Sweat & Tears grow sillier by the year, (real tears). This is the old Mahavishnu Ork on here, and they do quite a good deal with "Dawn", eliciting more than one gasp from Your Sacred Cowboy, our Ork watcher supreme. Springsteen fanatics (he doesn't have just fans) will be captivated by a new tune (one's all he got here) by Bruce, recorded at Max Kansas City. B-.

Opera and Western Classical buffs have long made their own tapes of performances to ship and swap among fellow fanciers, and rock and jazz fans are doing the same. Mike Tannehill is but one of a number of collectors throughout the world who are not going to let record companies and business dictate that music they'll listen to. With all the "information" issued weekly in concert halls and recording studios, serious listeners of bands like the Mothers, Henry Cow, Dylan, The Who and Pink Floyd, whose appeal and import goes way beyond the Music Business, will doubtlessly continue to spread the words. Write Mike for more details.

Confluence
GATO BARBIERI AND DOLLAR BRAND
(Arista Freedom AL 1003)

The material on this album was recorded in 1968 but has just been released in this country. The music is an encounter and conjunction between Argentinian saxophonist Gato Barbieri and South African pianist and cellist Dollar Brand.

Confluence: the flowing together of two or more streams. The streams are composed of energy, vitality, emotion and at the same time exploration.

A sentence from the liner notes tells the story well — "The music dwells not on American imperatives — complexity, development, swing — but on the imperatives of folk music: melody, texture, pattern, spirit."

But the simplicity of the music, marked by a distinct lack of embellishment, does not affect its intensity. Barbieri and Brand are almost necessarily counter-balances to each other.

Confluence: the combined stream formed by conjunction. The conjunction of a South African musician with an Argentinian musician in this case results from a common denominator of influence: legendary jazz innovators Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk and John Coltrane.

Confluence: strangely beautiful.

Southern Nights
ALLEN TOUSSAINT
(Reprise MS 2186)
Time: 35:22

Allen Toussaint's gift for creating melodic atmospheres is that of a giant. His work with a truckload of people (most notable Dr. John, LaBelle, Lee Dorsey, The Meters) has made his name one of the most respected in the business.

The man can play piano wisely, and with the fluid grace and power of the great line of New Orleans players (Professor Longhair up through Dr. John). Toussaint has amazing talents in arrangements, bringing freshness to the solidest of material (see The Band's Rock Of Ages) as well as his expert employment of the other band instruments to precise dimensions. And he can write and sing. But most of all, he can apply a marvelous instinct for the feel of a musical situation that eludes words. He is able to elicit the mood of "Southern Nights" through his music, which is what it's all about.

Southern Nights is his third and finest solo album, but still dips down from the clouds in places. "Last Train," "Southern Nights," "You Will Not Lose" and "Cruel Way To Go Down" are all touched by the greatness of a truly inspired Toussaint, where the songs sing themselves, like the breeze in the treeze. Natural instruments of wonder. The rest is passable, but noticeably inferior. It must be hoped that Allen Toussaint will one day get to real grips with probably the biggest talent he will ever produce — Allen Toussaint.

The Cinema: Forward into the past

THE CINEMA: FORWARD INTO THE PAST
by Stuart Sojcher

I recall reading a statement by one of Below the Salt's music critics a few months ago explaining why music album—concert reviews are emphasized in this 'magazine.' He claimed that music is this generations' one common denominator and that it has exerted a profound influence over us. Perhaps that is true to a certain extent, but today we live in a media society where the visual takes precedence over not only music, but the written word. Who can deny the power of the visual when for ten years filmed Viet Nam battles were considered to be an essential part of the evening news?

As a result, film is rapidly becoming a common denominator for most people. "What have you seen for movies lately?" "Did you see this or that film?" In recent months those two questions emerge rather early in most conversations I've had with people and not only because I'm a film addict: people are simply more interested in movies than ever before.

Yet despite this current surge in interest, film remains a puerile art form at the University of Massachusetts. "This rush to film courses is encouraging a new form of illiteracy. It threatens to undermine the culture that higher education is designed to uphold." This would seem to typify the current attitude towards film at this university as the formation of a film program has been denied.

Five of the small number of film professors on this campus are leaving at the end of this year. One was fired and the other two are leaving U.Mass. because they realize that film has no future here.

Despite the fact that in the past there has been a fair amount of film courses offered, enrollment has not been that high. Courses that appear to be 'fun' or 'entertaining' attract the most people. These courses include: "Gangster in Film," "Horror in Film," "Science-Fiction Films" and the "Westerner" although the latter did not have as many students in comparison to the others, which is surprising considering the popularity of that genre. Courses such as "Film and Lit." "Avant-Garde Film," "Bunuel—Hitchcock" and "Drama and Film" are usually characterized by low enrollments but student interest is very high. The fact remains that film is still looked upon by most students as entertainment, not as serious art. Who really cares what the film is trying to do as long as it has some action, is exciting and fun? So what if The Godfather II is a fascinating study of power, it has a good story, doesn't it?

Films like the Towering Inferno and Funny Lady make millions while so called 'serious' films such as The Conversation and Mean Streets suffer. The former was made by the same director of The Godfathers, Francis Ford Coppola, and nominated for Best Picture in the Oscar competition for this year. Critically acclaimed, the movie was seen by few because it was slow-paced, intensely serious and thought-provoking. Gene Hackman is superb in a very restrained performance and the story itself is a pertinent one, concerning wiretapping and surveillance — reminiscent of the Watergate affair. Approximately 150 people out of a possible 600 seat capacity saw the film in the Campus Center Auditorium on Sunday night, and were treated to a fascinating film. The unfortunate thing is that this film was deserving of a much larger audience. It demonstrates the skill of a director who is only reknowned for his Godfather exploits and gives a frightening and profound examination of today's society. And yet, who really cares? "It's too slow... There's no action... What does this all mean?"

Hollywood figures that people don't want to see 'serious' films; they haven't made much money in the past, so why should they now when times are bad? Perhaps the ultimate question is whether we the public will continue to stand for the proliferation of trash that Hollywood consistently puts out.

Movies made for television are a case in point. These movies are made by the major motion picture studios (keeping them alive financially) for little money and time. The stories are basically quite simple and supposedly contain "social realism", but in reality they're just old fashioned moral tales full of coy titillation and evasive topicality. Anything is permissible for these telefilms as long as it's within PG grounds.

Who are the networks protecting? According to the March-April issue of Film Comment: "People who watch TV movies are mostly between twenty-five and forty, more urban than rural, and "better educated." These viewers are alternatively described as the same audience that goes to the movies — or as the people who used to go to the movies but who now, with marriage and the kids and the house in the suburbs, don't go out as much." This certainly doesn't help films' attempt at being taken seriously as an art form.

The distinction between trash as art and film as art is an important one to make. For film to achieve a respectable image, it is essential that upon examination of the many films that are released, this distinction is made. A four-star rating of Reefer Madness is certainly different from the four-star rating of The Conversation. In order to accomplish this, critics must delve into the film's visual effects, not only the narrative structure, and in so doing better educate the public about film.

And what about higher education? Is film a threat to "undermine the culture that higher education is designed to uphold?" For people to better appreciate film, the arts, or literature, they must be educated; isn't that the way it is for everything?

Spinning around the Globe

by Judith Wolinsky-Soloway

Creaking seats, smells of hot crunchy popcorn, long Saturday afternoons spent at the movies. Bring back memories? There's a movie theatre in the area that is recapturing the nostalgia of those Saturday matinees flavored with the pungent odors of disinfectant and noisy seats held together with generations of discarded chewing gum. Although physically young, this theatre is old spiritually. For the Globe Theatre in Northampton gives you the same homey feeling the continuous run movie theatres of your youth gave. Dedicated to bringing quality movies, whether old, new, foreign or domestic to this area, there's even a chance to see some sorely-missed cartoons on occasion.

The Globe owes its existence to the enterprising young owners, Dennis Curvan and Stephen Brown.

Curran considers a "good" film as "having something to be said for it artistically. The films we show are more than pure entertainment."

Curran noted points of interest to this reporter in a recent tour of the premises. In the dim auditorium it was hard to decipher details, but the musty smells reminiscent of my old favorite movie theatre abounded. With pride he pointed out the authentic decorations, including the two three-foot lighted wall torches from a Holyoke Theatre.

Opening a theatre like the Globe had been Curran's dream for years. Originally high school buddies from Morristown, New Jersey, Curran and Brown met again while living in this area and eventually formed a business partnership to open a movie theatre. They chose the Globe's present site based not only on its business district location but also because of an additional advantage — a projection booth already existed in the building. Someone else had tried to make a go of a movie theatre called "The Talkie" which existed intermittently in the years before Curran and Brown arrived.

The new owners spent four and one-half months transforming the empty room into a cozy 116-seat theatre. Even the floor had to replaced and a complete wall rebuilt.

The roomy, fort-like projection booth and its machinery is an impressive sight few patrons see. And it too carries on the theme of old but functional equipment and decor. It even has its own bathroom. The film equipment is impressive. One 16 mm and two huge 35 mm simplex projectors aim like cannons into the auditorium.

Curran admits the business he and Brown are in is highly competitive. "We're bidding against other theatres for the same films."

Money is definitely the key to the business. It's only the big movie theatre companies that can afford to bid on a film that is "hot" at any given moment.

Surprisingly, the Globe's clientele is not a solid college crowd. "Only 50 per cent of the patrons are college students while the other half are community residents," says Curran.

A typical monthly Globe schedule is a conglomerate of different types of films. In April, for example, selections ranged from the European fantasy Beauty and the Beast to the realistic American Mean Streets, with King of Hearts and others in between.

The Globe's personal and homey, touch doesn't stop at the furnishings. Coke is served from a quarter century old red Coca-Cola cooler and the phone is answered by Brown or Curran personally if they are in the building.

"Nostalgia" is a word bandied about quite a bit lately. Suddenly "old" is better than "new." Old television shows are back, old clothes, old movies, the list is endless. Besides bringing pleasure in the form of film entertainment, the Globe also fits comfortably in the "nostalgic" period the country is going through now.

ALICE DOESN'T LIVE HERE ANYMORE++++
Ellen Burstyn's Academy award winning performance as a mother. Martin Scorese did it. (Mountain Farms Four Theatres).

AT LONG LAST LOVE+
Oh, what gobbledegook! Peter Bogdanovich has pioneered the rape of the Hollywood musical, insomuch as he has cast Burt Reynolds, as he has cast Cybill Shepherd, as he has forced them to strain their virgin vocal chords to such a point that participants of the audience are seen rotating their heads in their seats, ala Linda Blair, to avoid sensory contact with the screen. Cole Porter has never wasted his time more sweetly. (the Showcase Cinemas of West Springfield, Massachusetts)

Un fantastique pellicule par Francois Truffaut. Beau photographie, un doux scenario et accablant provisoire. Naturel boule! (Campus Cinemas, where Lary Abrams manages on Tuesday nights).

DRACULA—FRANKENSTEIN++++
Aghast, I found my frame wearily making its way up the rocky edifice, where the lightning smouldered the ground at the flat summit. But then suddenly he stood there! Andy Warhol, camera at his side, preaching news of his satirical works, based on the classics of Shelley and Stoker. Macabre and mysterious, to be sure, but heretofore unmatched at the price of a mere dollar. (Campus Cinemas III)

FREEBIE AND THE BEAN+
Returning for another falsified attempt at our reputable Mountain Farms Four, are you? Your slime has for long been seeping, like liquor out of the Bluewall, into the minds of our local brethren. Be gone! Be gone! (I already told you, fool!).

FUNNY LADY+
Frankly, I found it a trifle bore, watching this Ms. Streisand parade her over-used, mock-Yiddish exuberance through this tribute to nothing else but her previous roles. Mr. Caan sits in her pocket and tries vigorously to keep his methods intact. Goodness, has everyone become frightened of this lady? (Showkie Cinies, Wesspringfield).

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT—LOST HORIZON+++
Oh please, PLEASE don't hold it against me... I-I haven't s-s-seen either of them! A-a friend told me they were g-good, though, A f-film editor has his shortcomings, t-too. (T-TONIGHT in S.U.B., 7 and 9).

MURDER ON THE ORIENT EXPRESS+++
Dame Agatha Christie's masterwork of mystery, garnished heavily with international stars, titillating costumes, and a robust slice of acting from Hercule Poirot, alias Albert Finney. Bravo! (ye olde Campus Cinema).

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM++++
For those who have yet to have their first taste of a Woodrow Allen comedy, I must warn you — they're quite amusing! Mr. Allen succeeds through not only topical josh, but through nutty actions reminiscent of Chaplin and Lewis. (Amherst Cinema).

SERPICO++++
Pacino... the actor! Pacino... the man! Pacino... the cop who was responsible for a mass investigation of the corrupt morality existing within the New York Police Department and the subsequent near-death of Pacino... the actor! (Amherst Cinema)

SHAMPOO+++
What inert social consciousness is to say who we are to copulate with, or why? The rippling muscles of Warren Beatty trigger preorgasmic drool in the female sex organs of Julie Christie, Goldie Hawn, and Lee Grant. Beatty, the hairdresser, is most certainly troubled by a compulsive neurosis where his sex and hunger drives are dissatisfied and thus combined. Take two hours of it and call me in a week to give me your analysis. (Showcase Cinemas, W.S.)

TOMMY++++ (at least)
Splendid aesthetics vault this adaptation of the world-reknown opera of rock music into a category previously reserved for past Broadway classics. Director Russell's conspicuous use of zoom, superimposition, two-shots, and the juxtaposition of the uncanny image with the high-decibel notes is responsible for the inner explosions within the enthralled onlooker's cranium. (Cinema de Showcase)

WOMEN IN LOVE++++
Ken Russell's interpretation of D.H. Lawrence's turn-of-the-century novel of love, romance, marriage, sex, petting, fondling, and embracing among four English... lovers. Of course one can argue that Lawrence had every intention of manipulationg his theme so that it revolved solely around the characters, rather than extending into the literary realms of the imagination in every aspect of the word, as it does here. Furthermore, the subject is engrossing enough without the director's reliance on exaggeration, symbolism, and platedomy. A beautiful film, however, it surely is and once was even more if you know what I mean. Presented by Butterfield Arts Group, bless their souls. (TONIGHT in the C.C.A., 7:30 and 10:00 p.m.)

— Do you see how foolish and dull it is when I try to be serious, when I cast away my inner impulses to put on a phony, intellectual image? Isn't it more entertaining and just as informative, like this:

BRANNIGAN++
As a follow-up to McQ, John Wayne attempts another police role, because he knows no one sees Westerns anymore. As usual, if you're into the Big Dink's films you'll probably like this one, but most of us know he acts about as good as an orang-outang with a golf club up his ass and we wish the Apaches had tomahawked him to death a long time ago. UMASS CHILDREN DESERE OUR UMass administrators and a group of up to thirty-five students reached agreement late yesterday afternoon after the students and their children staged a six-and-one-half hour sit-in in the office of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

The students, with their pre-school aged children, had issued four "demands" protesting what they said were proposed cutbacks in University-sponsored day-care services for their children.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage, administrator of the five day-care centers run by UMass, announced agreement on the demands that ended the sit-in.

Earlier in the day, UMass police had sealed portions of the Whitmore Administration Building to outsiders and refused food and diapers to the group.

"We reached an accord," Gage told reporters after a three-hour meeting between administrators and the Day Care Task Force broke up about five-thirty. "More than anything we reached an agreement on how we could communicate in the future."

Anne Ferguson, a philosophy professor and member of the day care group, told reporters alongside Gage: "We have made a victory...Chancellor Bromery has agreed to some of our demands and he has made committments."

In their demands, the Task Force called for a promise that two of five University operated day care centers for pre-school children would not be closed. They asked for a full-time administrator to oversee the centers, which now cost the University $55,000 a year.

The centers serve about 160 children and allow parents attending classes to leave their children under supervision. They also are used to train students in special education. Tuition for a child at one is about $360 per year, according to Gage.

Gage said the two centers in question would be retained and he promised to announce a new location for them "within ten days." He said he will seek an administrator for them, and will ask for a new state-funded position if necessary.

He also said the administration would meet two other demands — finding out how many children are elegible for the centers and get more student and part-time help to supervise them.

The sit-in began about 10 yesterday morning and by 11:30 Chancellor Bromery ordered campus police to guard locked entry ways.

The group peaked at about thirty-five but had dwindled to 17 adults and ten children by 2 p.m., according to UMass-Amherst spokesman Peter Gluckler.

The Task Force group wandered through several offices within an area closed off by police. Children played freely on carpets and police allowed them to come and go. Staff in the area were sent home early.

"They're just sitting, they're just eating sandwiches," UMass spokesman Peter Gluckler said early in the day. "In some regard they are obstructing the work because they are limiting the flow of people."

Cambodia action: Rescue and reactions

Helicopter lift frees Marines from Tang fire

EDMUND MUSKIE
Lauds U.S. actions.

Compiled from Wires

WASHINGTON — U.S. helicopters whirred through darkness pierced by a torrent of small-arms fire last night and plucked nearly 200 Marines from Tang island in the culmination of an assault which freed an American merchant ship and crew from Cambodian captors.

Pentagon officials said preliminary reports showed 2 American dead and 14 missing. Precise figures were unavailable on the wounded, but sources said several were seriously hurt and being treated aboard Navy ships.

One Marine and one Air Force man were killed they said. Those unaccounted for were eight Marines and six Marines and six Air Force helicopter crewmen.

No update on the casualty report was likely before today, the Pentagon said.

The Marines were lifted from Koh Tang to the aircraft carrier Coral Sea, which then stood 10 miles away from the tiny, rocky island in the Gulf of Thailand off Cambodia.

The nation still awaited official word on the fate of the 14 servicemen reported missing.

Meanwhile, the last of an 1,100-man U.S. Marine contingent brought to Thailand in connection with the Mayaguez operation has departed, sources said today. The Marines' arrival without the Thai government's permission touched off a diplomatic confrontation.

The sources would not rule out the possibility that others were missing since the Marine force was scattered all over the Pacific after the evacuation but before a man by man accounting could be made. A precise accounting was expected today. Two

Antiwar demonstration staged against involvement

By Shelly Cohen
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - About 150 persons turned out yesterday for a protest demonstration amid lunchtime crowds against U.S. military action in Cambodia, showing the antiwar movement is still alive in Boston.

A smaller crowd of spectators gathered to watch the rally in front of the John F. Kennedy Federal Building.

While many Americans were sighing with relief that the war in Southeast Asia and the Mayaguez incident was over, members of the Indochina Peace Campaign, the American Friends Service Committee and CPPAX — Citizens for Participation in Political Action — wanted Americans to remember how it all began.

"This is just too much like the Gulf of Tonkin incident," said Ken Brociner of Somerville, a member of the Indochina Peace Campaign. "I think everyone now knows that that incident was provoked. We're disappointed that there hasn't been more of a Congressional response."

While the demonstrators marched in a large oval in front of the main entrance to the federal building they chanted such slogans as "U.S. out of Southeast Asia; end imperialist wars."

Around the corner hundreds of Government Center workers sat on benches ahd around the foundations of City Hall Plaza eating their lunches, unaware of the protest.

Students meet Gov, refuse to comply with 10% budget

By William Mills
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Education Secretary Paul Parks met yesterday with 16 students from Amherst and Boston campuses in a "frustrating" effort to gather student input on making a 10 per cent budget cut at UMass.

Heading the student delegation from Amherst was Student Government Association (SGA) President John O'Keefe and Student Organizing Project Economic Coordinator John Fisher.

Meeting with the students for 40 minutes in a round-table discussion, Dukakis called the meeting a "semantic exercise" and was "distressed" when students did not comply in making cuts at the university.

"Right now we have a real budget problem," Dukakis said, "and I have four weeks to submit this budget to the legislature. Now you (students) say 'sorry we can't play' — it's distressing."

Parks felt "frustrated" midway through the meeting with the students because "we haven't gone into this business of working on the budget cut."

Edelin judge summarily refuses to declare Hub physician innocent

By Seth Mydans
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The judge who presided over the February manslaughter conviction of Dr. Kenneth C. Edelin summarily refused yesterday to declare him innocent in the death of an aborted fetus.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge James P. McGuire addressed a packed courtroom and curtly denied Edelin's motion that he declare the jury's verdict incorrect because it went against the weight of the evidence.

He offered no explanation for his ruling.

Asked if he was surprised by McGuire's decision, Edelin smiled and said simply, "disappointed."

His lawyer, William P. Homans, stood before an array of television cameras and shrugged.

"There's not much we can say," he said.

Homans said he would proceed with his appeal before the state Supreme Court.

His motion before McGuire was not part of the appeal process. It was brought under an unusual Massachusetts law that allows a presiding judge to overturn a jury verdict.

Edelin, a 36-year-old Boston City Hospital obstetrician, was convicted Feb. 15 in the death of a fetus he aborted legally at the hospital in 1973.

The landmark verdict intensified national debate about legalized abortions, and caused a number of hospitals to cut back on performing them.

McGuire sentenced Edelin to one year's probation but stayed the sentence pending appeal. Since then, Edelin has been back at work at the hospital, where he is director of ambulatory services in the department of obstetrics and gynecology.

Prosecutor Newman A. Flanagan said after McGuire's ruling, "Once again, the judge has indicated that... there was sufficient evidence if believed by the jury that would warrant the defendant being found guilty to manslaughter."

Bouncy and brainy, this stripper's no boob

United Press International

BOSTON — It's difficult to believe, but there is a side of the incredible Ms. Jacquie Brodie that cannot be seen.

For when the 5-foot-2 stripper struts the long runway at the World Famous 2 O'Clock Club in Boston's tawdry Combat Zone, she bares all the charms she claims will make her America's next sex goddess.

The drinking stops. There's no talking. All eyes watch the tiny dancer rip through her bouncy, er, what's a good word? open performance. The answer is 37-22-35.

"I think my mother wishes I was a lawyer instead," she said dressed in a demure off-white pantsuit and picking at a dish of Crepes Aurore during an interview in a fashionable restaurant.

That combination sets her apart from most other strip and porno movie stars. She answers questions with a staccato of multisyllabic words. Beneath the flaming red hair is a brain that has soaked up political science and law studies.

"I had very idealistic political views and a deeper feeling that I was about to be trapped within the system," she explained on how she became an exotic dancer instead of an attorney.

UMass expected to be site for JFK archives, museum

By John J. Mullins
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — The John F. Kennedy Library archives and museum probably will be built at the University of Massachusetts, either in Amherst or Boston, the library corporation indicated yesterday.

In an announcement, the corporation said it would look "closely" at any existing building in Massachusetts that is proposed in the next month for the museum part of the library.

"In the absence of any such possibility, the corporation is strongly inclined to keep the museum and archives together and to build them somewhere other than in Cambridge," the announcement said.

It said that since announcing in February that it would not build the museum in Cambridge, it had received far more than 100 offers,

Kopechnes visit

EDGARTOWN (AP) — Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kopechne of Swiftwater, Pa., visited Chappaquiddick Island this week where their daughter, Mary Jo, died in a famous incident involving Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in 1969.

The couple, it was learned yesterday, visited the Dike Road bridge where Mary Jo died when a car she was in, driven by Kennedy, plunged off the bridge into a tidal inlet, trapping her in the vehicle.

Mr. and Mrs. Kopechne stayed in Edgartown Monday and had lunch Tuesday with Dukes County Sheriff Christopher Look, who participated in the investigation of the incident.

It was their second visit to the island. The first was in 1970.

Capt. praises Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Capt. Charles P. Miller, commanding officer of the recaptured American merchant ship Mayaguez, has sent the following telegram to President Ford:

"Dear Mr. President: The captain and officers and crew of the SS Mayaguez thank you and all the brave military forces who are fighting and dying to save our lives."

It was signed by Miller.

Mindszenty eulogized

MARIAZELL, Austria (UPI) — A eulogy delivered yesterday at the funeral of Cardinal Jozsef Mindszenty accused both the Communists and the Vatican of subjecting the former primate of Hungary to needless suffering.

Dutch priest Warenfried van Straaten, a personal friend of the cardinal, said the Communists tortured Mindszenty to make him confess at his 1949 treason trial in Budapest — widely regarded as a show trial.

"He was subject to merciless torture," Straaten said. "God tested him and found him worthy. God tested him again and he suffered again when the Pope removed him from office" as primate of Hungary last year.

Pigeons served

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — Broiled pigeon has been added to the menu of a local rescue mission, courtesy of the city, but some transients at the facilty apparently just aren't that hungry.

"They were a little bit tough," Gateway Rescue Mission director George Roberson said Monday of the pigeons, which were broiled in gravy and served to about 30 needy persons.

"But some of the people coming off the street wouldn't eat them," he confessed. "The taste was strange to me. I'm not real fond of them. I guess we're going to have to get a pressure cooker."

City pest control officials offered the pigeons to any organization that would use the birds, which are being trapped atop the old abandoned King Edward Hotel in downtown Jackson. The rescue mission accepted the offer.

Laotians release 3 American hostages

By Robert Kaylor

VIENTIANE (UPI) — Student demonstrators in the central Laotian town of Savannakhet yesterday freed three American officials they had held hostage but kept control of U.S. government buildings they seized there in an anti-American rampage, U.S. sources said.

The sources said the three Americans — including Sanford J. Stone, the senior U.S. official in central Laos — reported by telephone they were in good health and spirits. The demonstrators allowed them to return to their homes pending arrival of coalition government officials to negotiate their demands.

A Laotian government spokesman yesterday apologized for the anti-American outbreak, saying "the government is very sorry about the incident."

The sources said the demonstrators were still apparently in control of U.S. government buildings in Savannakhet, a Mekong river community of about 30,000 persons. They said there did not seem to be the same degree of destruction as in similar demonstrations Wednesday in the royal capital of Luang Prabang.

In the Luang Prabang demonstrations by about 300 youths, windows at AID and U.S. Information Service offices were broken, furniture and typewriters destroyed, communications equipment damaged and a motor pool of about 20 vehicles looted. The local provincial governor's office was ransacked as well and all Americans were evacuated from the city by air.

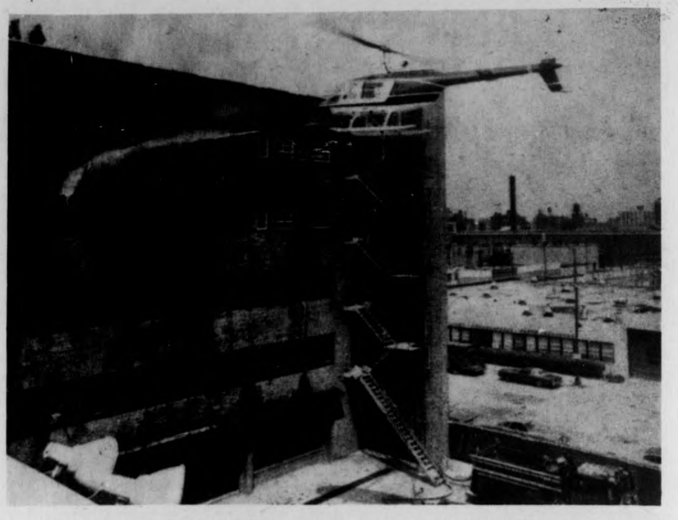
U.S. sources said Stone and the other two Americans, who had been held over night in the provincial governor's residence, agreed to remain in their homes until the Laotian government reaches agreement with demonstrators on their demands for the ouster of the U.S. AID mission and the replacement of number of Laotian government officials.

Stone is from Cleveland, Ohio. The other two Americans who were held with him are Charles R. Pearcy, 63, of Salem, W. Va., an administrative officer, and Daniel P. Ster, 28, of Columbus, Ind., an economist.

Ouday Souvannouvong, spokesman for the coalition cabinet, said the Pathet Lao and non-Communist ministers who remain after last weekend's collapse of pro-American elements in the government had not yet made any decision about future American presence in this Indochinese country.

But a Pathet Lao spokesman for the joint peace-keeping commission told newsmen that the group unanimously recommended at a meeting this morning to abolish the U.S. aid mission. The commission's recommendation will go to the cabinet, possible for consideration next week.

Some U.S. officials have voiced hopes of a continuing American role in Laos, but the senior AID official evacuated from Luang Prabang indicated Thursday he saw little chance of returning to carry out American-sponsored programs in the royal capital.



Using a helicopter to fight a high rise fire is demonstrated by the Chicago Fire Department for the National Fire Protection Association meeting in Chicago yesterday. The helicopter is connected by a hose to the fire truck below.

Burn effigy of Ford

Thai demonstrators protest against US

BANGKOK (UPI) — Thousands of demonstrators burned an effigy of President Ford in Bangkok yesterday in protest against his sending U.S. Marines to Thailand as part of the operation to recapture the American freighter Mayaguez and its crew from the Cambodian Communists.

With the rescue and retrieval operation completed successfully, American sources said Washington moved swiftly to repair its strained relations with Bangkok by almost immediately flying the 800-man Marine task force back out of Thailand.

Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj, whose credibility was threatened by the U.S. decision to ignore his diplomatic protest against sending Marines based on Thai soil onto Cambodian soil, said his government is considering a complete review of Thailand's long-standing alliance with the United States.

But he said Thailand would stop short of a complete break in relations with Washington.

"We have to respond, because otherwise the United States will continue this sort of thing," Kukrit told newsmen after disclosing he was reviewing several options in dealing with the Ford Administration's decision to ignore bilateral agreements on the use of U.S. forces here, which call for prior consultation with Thailand on all troop movements.

Several thousand protesters, mostly student leftists, gathered in a Bangkok park to demonstrate against the U.S. action. A few charged that Kukrit acted in collusion with the United States and agreed with the Ford administration's tactics in regaining the freighter and its 40-man crew.

They burned an effigy of the American president before disbanding peacefully.

But Kukrit said his diplomatic protest, presented to the U.S. Embassy here within 12 hours after the Marines were airlifted into U Tapao air base in the predawn hours, was ignored.

"It is obvious that Thai-U.S. relations have to be reviewed," he said.

Foreign ministry sources said that Kukrit was considering three options:

— Recalling the Thai ambassador from Washington.

— Asking for an immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops, which number about 23,000, from Thailand.,

— Circulating a diplomatic note to all embassies here formally advising them that the United States acted on its own in forcibly retrieving the Mayaguez.

With the fall of Saigon and Phnom Penh, Thailand has been trying to reach an accomodation with its new Communist neighbors and hoped to take a large step in that direction with the arrival Friday of a delegation from the Provisional Revolutionary Government in South Vietnam.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy yesterday said Ford had no alternative to the military action needed to retrieve the Mayaguez. Kennedy is shown testifying at an earlier date.

Rejoining of Vietnam hinted

By United Press International

Top government officials of both Vietnams yesterday opened a three-day celebration of the Communist victory in South Vietnam by calling for peace and reunification in an unprecedented joint television and radio appearance in Saigon.

In Hanoi, Communist North Vietnam praised its armed forced which, it said, smashed the South Vietnamese army "to smithereens" in a historic 55-day offensive. It marked the first official acknowledgement by the Communists of Hanoi's role in the blitz that destroyed the Nguyen Van Thieu regime in Saigon.

Attorney Nguyen Huu Tho, president of the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front, and North Vietnamese President Ton Duc Thang hailed the "solidarity of Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam and all Socialist states of the world," according to dispatches from UPI correspondent Alan Dawson in Saigon.

Tho read a 20-minute speech from a specially constructed reviewing stand in front of the presidential palace, strongly condemning the United States for its past intervention in Vietnamese affairs but not calling for reprisals.

He emphasized the need for peace, unification and security throughout the country.

After his speech, Thang, who became president of North Vietnam following the death of Ho Chi Minh in 1969, joined Tho in calling for peace and unification. The aging Thang spoke for only 10 minutes.

Although the two chiefs did not formally announce a coalition government, they repeatedly stated that they considered all of Vietnam now united.

"We are gathered here to celebrate the great victory of our people," said Tho, referring to the South Vietnamese surrender to the Viet Cong April 30.

"The Ho Chi Minh campaign has been a success and South Vietnam is now completely liberated; from now on Vietnam will never again be divided."

Saigon has now been officially renamed Ho Chi Minh City and Thang said that "this is the only city in the world named after our beloved Uncle Ho."

The celebrations began at dawn, with a massive parade — carried on national radio and television — of demonstrators walking and riding past the reviewing stand, down the mail streets of the city and along the waterfront.

The parade included tanks, and military units, as well as a flyover of jets.

The admission of Hanoi's major role in the war came in a speech by Le Duan, first secretary of the North Vietnamese Communist party Central Committee, distributed by the North Vietnamese News Agency and monitored in Hong Kong.

Seizure supported

United Press International

Newspapers in England, Spain and Israel said yesterday the United States was justified in using military force to retake the American cargo ship Mayaguez and its crew from the Cambodians.

Somewhat surprisingly, the Soviet Union's official Tass news agency reported the American show of strength without comment.

Reaction was also favorable in South Africa, but a French newspaper criticized the action. United Nations officials were silent on the matter.

China hits action

TOKYO (AP) — China said today the U.S. bombing of Cambodian gun boats was an "outright act of piracy," Japan's Kyodo news service reported from Peking. It was China's first public reaction to the Mayaguez affair.

Kyodo said the Chinese statement was made by Vice Premier Li Hsien-nien at a dinner party celebrating the "great victory of Vietnam."

Kyodo quoted Li as saying "U.S. imperialism has still not learned from its defeats in Indochina. A few days ago a U.S. vessel intruded into the territorial waters of Cambodia. Cambodia acted to preserve its own national sovereignty.

"But the United States took advantage of this and bombed Cambodian land and vessels. This is an outright act of piracy and should be inevitably met with strong denunciation from the world public opinion."

Senate resolution

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Senate passed a resolution yesterday commending United States action in recovering the freight Mayaquez and its crew from Cambodia.

The vote was 27-2.

One of the opponents, Sen. Edward L. Burke, D-Framingham, said the resolution is "appealing to a gun boat kind of diplomacy." He also said it was premature.

The resolution's sponsor, Sen. John F. Parker, R-Taunton, supported it on grounds of patriotism, and he said that, "Over the years, the Massachusetts Senate passed many meaningless Vietnam resolutions every time Washington policy changed."

Among friends -- and alone

The last hours of David Harpin

By Bill Parent
Collegian Staff

Suicide comes as a shock to any community, and particularly a university community where there is a sense of identity with a student who takes his own life. Some of what appears in the following article may be hard to read, especially for the friends of David Harpin, but if we look deeper, we will see that we all share some of the frustrations which led Dave Harpin to the roof of the library on Tuesday. It is important to remember that other people are experiencing what we are, and that other people care. Through this, such a tragedy may be averted in the future.

David B. Harpin was described by his friends as a quiet, imaginative, honest person who liked to get high and listen to the Who and play basketball, and who did well in his classes.

But Dave Harpin, at 21, had one obsession — suicide — and it may well have been his honesty which brought him to the breaking point, after a long depression, and which made him sign his suicide note at 3:30 Tuesday afternoon.

According to Dave Bowers, a close friend of Harpin, the subject of death and suicide was a regular part of Harpin's conversation.

"He talked about it all the time, but we never thought he would go through with it," Bowers said.

However, last Friday night someone apparently stole some marijuana from Harpin's room and all weekend his friends in Webster noticed irregular behavior and increasing talk of his taking his own life.

Bowers said that the incident made Harpin very distrustful of even his closest friends; he couldn't understand how anyone "could be that dishonest."

A student who lives on the floor above Harpin's, Paul Logue, said that on Saturday during a dorm barbecue, Harpin approached him and told him how upset he was over the incident.

His Life's Story

"It was really strange," Logue said. "I hardly knew him except to say 'hi', but he started telling me his life's story; he just went on and on."

Another friend of Harpin's, Jack Haskell, who lived in the room next door, said "recently he had been talking about having to get home to Rochester where he lives to work on his father's farm." Haskell continued, saying that this "was very unusual; he didn't get along too well with his parents, and they had some problems last summer."

Harpin's father was a farmer and a career military man, and Dave Harpin once described his mother as "overly religious."

According to Bower, Harpin was no stranger to the roof of the 28-story library. He and his friends went up there often and Harpin "felt very at home there, he looked at it as his."

To get to the roof of the building, Harpin would take the elevator to the 26th floor, walk up two flights of stairs which cannot be locked off (there being no doorways in the stairwell itself), jimmy the lock to the roof door with a knife or a key, and be out on the roof.

Recently, however, they had been kicked off the roof by one of the workers.

"Dave felt really offended by this; he started telling the guy that he had no right to kick students off the roof of the building," said Bower.

After that incident, the locks were covered with metal plates which blocked access to the latch. When Harpin returned to the library and found the metal plates, he left a note saying if they didn't take the plates off he would "gum" all the locks.

Bowers said that afterwards, Harpin was determined to come up with a device to get around the plate.

When Harpin brought people up to the roof, it was usually to "get off" on the view, but sometimes, according to Bowers, "Dave would hang over the edge looking over the side saying, 'imagine the rush of going over.' "

Another friends of Harpin's, John Braidman, said "We never took Dave too seriously. He once said that all his talk about suicide was just joking; he told me that he was a coward and would never really do it."

A number of Harpin's friends said that they had tried to get him to go to mental health but "Dave just shrugged it off, when he went to Room To Move he never totally opened up, and that's what you have to do."

But Monday came and all was perfect for the act which Harpin had been preparing. The night before, he had drawn a picture of the east side of the library on the door to his room with a small "x" on the lower concrete walkway by the shrubbery.

That morning, Dave Harpin studied for a while preparing some labs. One of the people on his corridor said that "even that was unusual. He never was seen studying too much. He went to his classes and got good grades; he didn't have to study that much."

Later that afternoon, around 3:30, Harpin sat down to compose his own obituary. Harpin wrote that he was lonely and that he never received any recognition for what he was. His roommate said that he had been depressed for a while; he was unsure about his future. Harpin never filled out his pre-registration form for next semester and when he was asked what he was going to do, he wouldn't give an answer.

"He was going to go to the Air Force Academy or something when he was in high school, but he came here. It's not that he couldn't take this place; I don't know what it was," his roommate said.

At about 4 p.m. Harpin left his room in Webster, which was covered with posters of Townsend, Tull, prints by Van Gogh, and one that he especially liked, "The Crucifixtion," by Dali. He told his roommate he was going to dinner.

Harpin then went down to the Spring Fest, which was where Dave Bowers last saw him.

Waving Good-bye

Bowers was getting on his motorcycle when he saw Harpin approach him. Harpin stopped, waved as if to say good-bye rather than hello, and walked off toward the library.

Harpin then walked to the library, took the elevator to the 26th floor and took the stairs to the roof.

Police later found a small piece of sheet metal near the door, but they apparently never made the connection.

Harpin was carrying a small green backpack, an old fashioned powder horn filled with gunpowder, some model rocket engines and a knife.

When Harpin got onto the roof, he yelled and motioned to the people below. A woman from his corrider saw him standing on the roof from the area where Spring Fest was being held.

"When I saw him up there I knew it was Dave but I just thought he was on the roof again up to his usual antics."

At about 5 p.m., police responded to a call that someone was on the roof setting off firecrackers.

Bowers said that he was lighting rocket engines to "get the recognition he never got."

Sgt. Richard Grader was the first officer on the roof and found Harpin "extremely agitated". Harpin kept Grader away by waving a knife while saying that he was going to jump. Harpin then told Grader that he wanted an orange soda in an apparent attempt to get the officer to leave. However, Grader sent another officer to get the soda.

Meanwhile, a crowd had gathered below and some were heard to be chanting "jump!"

"This wasn't unusual: whenever a bunch of us were up on the library, someone would yell 'jump,' for all they knew we were probably workers," Bowers said.

After keeping Grader away, Harpin then turned and dropped his money, his meal ticket and some marijuana to the crowd below.

Backing up, Harpin suddenly took a running start and leaped from the top of the building, doing a swan dive before landing on the concrete walkway 286 feet below.

He landed yards from where he had drawn the "x" on his door the night before.

David, darkness clamped upon your soul.
heights above-
you chose your terrifying throne.
and David,
did you know your name was that of a great king?
and like a king
you toyed with destiny.
time stood still awaiting your decision.
some tried to remind you of your potential greatness. others mocked and goaded your destruction-as once a long let peace descend upon your spirit and let your burden lift. your shadowy traces will remain entwined with the endless

winds of time.

Economics profs seek fiscal answer

By Bill Densmore
Collegian Staff

The economics department on campus has been asked by Secretary of Education Paul Parks to "participate in trying to find answers to the state's present fiscal dilemma."

Parks made the request in a letter which he said was "on behalf of the Governor." In it, Parks said students had suggested Gov. Michael S. Dukakis get help from the economists when they questioned him at a "town meeting" in the Student Union Ballroom, May 5.

Economics dept. chairman Norman D. Aitken said yesterday he had circulated copies of the letter to the nearly 30 professors in the field and they were working on a formal response.

"We want to take this letter seriously," Aitken said. "We don't want to make a lot of comments off the top of our heads that will not be supported by a lot of research."

He said the department's response would involve "detailed study" and could result in a "set of recommendations to Gov. Dukakis which can be supported by sound research."

Parks's letter dated May 9, said:

"On behalf of the Governor I would appreciate any suggestions and direction that you might advise us to take as ways of finding solutions to our present fiscal crisis in the state. I would welcome the opportunity to receive these materials on behalf of the Governor of the Commonwealth."

The Dukakis request would appear to reflect the kind of academic involvement in state policy formation that he called on UMass to provide when he was on campus May 5.

The request to the UMass department is sure to bear fascinating fruit because of the political and ideological spectrum among its members. Perspectives range from die-hard Marxism or post-industrial socialism to the conservative doctrine of 19th century British free enterprise economist John Stuart Mills.

Local Bicentennial faces money trouble

By Dave Eibel
Collegian Staff

In a little over a year this country will be celebrating its 200th birthday, but at UMass the evidence that the Bicentennial is coming is hard to find.

Historian Frederick Jackson Turner wrote of the great frontier, with its wide expanse, as being the last safety valve of the United States. The headquarters of the Bicentennial Committee at this campus, is anything but a wide, open space.

On the second floor of Hills North, tucked away at the end of an endless corridor is the administrative office of the Bicentennial celebrations at UMass. The office resembles a hospital with white ceilings and floors, a cold, standard-issue gray floor, and five dissimilar chairs.

Curiously, on the floor, beside the solitary, almost naked desk, lies a phonebook.

Whether it's too early for pomp and ceremony, the office is strangely devoid of flags, posters, or reminders that July 4, 1976 will be a momentous date in this country's history. If anything, the Bicentennial office seems to be an unwilling tenant of Hills North.

John W. Lederle, past president of UMass and now a political science professor here, is the chairman of the UMass-Amherst Bicentennial Committee, made up of 13 persons, including five professors and eight other members of the campus community. He is one of three committee heads — each UMass campus has one — whose task it is to coordinate Bicentennial plans. As it looks now the drawn-out birthday party may be in financial trouble.

The Amherst, Boston, and Worcester committees are sharing a $50,000 trust fund grant from the trustees. To date this campus has received $11,000 in allocations, according to Kay Hanson, Assistant Director of Budgets for UMass. Besides $5,000 in initial operating expenses, the Amherst campus has received $1,000 for a slide presentation and Bicentennial symposium, $2,500 for the Massachusetts Review, and $2,500 for a Bicentennial speaker service. The largest allocation out of the $50,000 grant has been one for $5,000 for a visual history project to be jointly produced by the three UMass campuses.

According to Lederle, things will be quiet until the 1975-76 academic year.

"Our basic emphasis is on the next academic year," he said in a telephone interview yesterday with the Collegian.

The present meat cleaver economics, will force the three committees to economize. Although UMass asked the state for $200,000 in Bicentennial grants, no one is too confident that those monies will "escape the axe" as Hanson put it.

"We're quite aware that except for the $50,000 in trust money, we aren't likely to get anymore," said Lederle.

The improbability of getting further funds has forced Lederle and his committee to think of the most economical ways to fund Bicentennial events.

Lederle spoke of using "existing resources" for staging Bicentennial events, like having UMass departments set up special courses and attract special speakers.

"This will be one of the major ways of spending no money," said the former UMass president.

His major hope is to have the Fine Arts Center ready by next fall, but that will depend on the state lifting a ban on sewer tie-ins to Amherst's present sewage system.

UMass students consider town meeting experience valuable

By June Valliere
Collegian Reporter

Two UMass students say being a town meeting member is a valuable way to learn about town government and human nature.

"Through my town meeting member experience I have begun to learn about real things," said Mark Benoit, a junior economics major. He said, "In class I learned a lot of theory, but in the town meetings I have learned how to apply these theories."

Lisa Alberghini, a freshman sociology major, said her town meeting member experience is "definitely a beneficial learning experience for me, especially in relating to people".

Both students were elected Amherst Town Meeting members in March and have been attending the annual town meeting for two weeks. Benoit said he got involved in Amherst town government through his work in rent control as student senator and University State Communications Council member. He is interested in seeing Amherst adopt a rent control policy which is the last article on the warrant.

Alberghini said, "I ran for town meeting member because I look at Amherst as my home. I like the town and I think student input is valuable."

Both students agreed that townspeople were apprehensive at first about students not being concerned about the town and say that they have seen the students act responsibly, they respect them.

Benoit said, "At first they were a little apprehensive about some things, they were afraid students would vote for elaborate projects which would increase their taxes but by students acting responsibly, the townspeople have even come to look upon some of the Progressive Candidate Pool articles favorably".

The Progressive Candidate Pool (PCP) was formed this spring by a group of students and town people with common interests who banded together and ran on the same platform. After several of these candidates were elected, the Pool represented several articles to the town which they had been researching, to be placed on the Town Meeting warrant.

Alberghini said the biggest frustration students have to deal with is the false impression some of the town people had about them. Some town people think students are only concerned about themselves, she said.

"No student supports all the PCP articles, the town people think all the students support them and are against all the town people articles," Alberghini said, "but when people see students voting against some of the PCP articles, they begin to trust us."

Day care advocates hold Bromery's office, protest stalling

The six-hour sit-in to protest administration inaction and possible cuts in University day care services was an event planned Wednesday night and begun from a staging area in front of Goodell Hall yesterday at 9 a.m. Two reporters for the campus Progressive News Service were with the group all day. Here is their report.

By Meredith Manning
and Joe Cotter
Progressive News Service

The holding of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's office by the Day Care Task Force yesterday was an action born out of frustration at administrative stalling on plans to provide adequate child care to the pre-schoolers of students, faculty and workers.

News analysis

A spokesperson for the Task Force said the occupation was "to get some answers to our demands for day-care space, facilities and staff. These demands are non-negotiable and we are prepared to stay here until they are met."

The demands were sent by the Task Force to Bromery and affirmative action officer James DeShields last Friday in response to administrative inaction on day care committments originally made last October.

After entering Whitmore at about 10:30 a.m., members of the Task Force met with Vice-Chancellor Gage. Ann Ferguson, a faculty member and mother, asked Gage, "Why, when the three Senates all passed a child care proposal as a priority, wasn't it acted upon?" Gage responded that the decision was ultimately Bromery's, and that he could only make recommendations.

The meeting was then interrupted by an announcement that the outside doors had been chained and all phones cut off. The UMass police then placed officers at strategic locations throughout the building. Only those students with "specific business" and proper identification were allowed on the first two floors of the building.

This policy extended to prohibiting those with supplies from gaining access to the occupied area. John O'Keefe, Student Government Association President, attempted to reach the occupants with food and diapers for the children, but was denied entry. "Day Care Task Force" tags were issued after a mother was separated from her child who was playing in an area closed off by police.

Five representatives from the Task Force met with administrators several times during the afternoon. Despite not allowing others to enter, outside supporters managed to smuggle fruit and cigarettes inside Bromery's office.

After an hour and a half of negotiations, the five representatives returned to consult with the other demonstrators. The entire Day-Care Task Force discussed the demands and assessed the progress of the meeting.

The negotiating team presented a more specific version of the demands to the administrators. After extended discussion, decisions were finally reached.

According to the Task Force negotiators, the administration agreed that space would be provided for two Third World day-care centers. The areas under consideration are Hills North and North Village Apartments. The administrators said that a specific location would be decided upon by Tuesday.

Administrators also agreed to the demand that a coordinator be hired to oversee day-care staff and facilities. Recommendations for this position will be provided by the Day-Care Advisory Committee, made up of representatives from each of the centers. Recommendations will also be submitted by Gage's office for approval by the advisory committee.

The Task Force maintains that a full-time coordinator is essential, however, the administrators asked that the necessary proof be provided to support this position. The Task Force said that they would have "no problem" in obtaining the supportive information by Tuesday.

The administration said there would be an increase in work-study funds available for day-care staff, but would not make a committment as to the ratio of staff to children. The Task Force maintains that one staff member is necessary for every four children. No decision was reached on this matter.

An administrative committment was given to release statistical information concerning the number of students, faculty and workers who are in need of day-care facilities. A check-box may be put on student registration forms in the Fall whereby students would indicate their need for such a facility. In additon, faculty and staff may be asked to fill out an optional questionaire on their day-care needs.

The Day-Care Task Force said that they will assist the administration in gathering the information necessary to provide adequate day-care facilities.

A spokesperson for the Task Force summed up the day's events saying, "The absence of friction between employees, police and demonstrators definitely contributed to the success of this unprecedented occupation."

Students meet Dukakis, reject budget cut plan

"What you've given me is another statement," Dukakis chided the students. "We're looking for information and we haven't got a single piece of it from students on how we can eliminate expenditures."

Dukakis said students at other state colleges have offered budget-cutting help to Educational Affairs Secretary Paul Parks.

"Others have come forward," Dukakis said. "But the one institution that has said 'sorry, we won't play' is the University of Massachusetts."

Parks, who also attended the meeting, said budget cuts can be made without reducing student services.

The students called for higher taxes on corporations, unearned income and inheritances to avoid budget cuts. But the governor said, "There isn't one chance in a million of getting that through the legislature. It wouldn't get three votes and a half."

Offering to form a committee consisting solely of UMass students Park's staff, Parks said this committee's decision on a budget "will be the one brought to the Legislature.

"I want to sit down and work on this budget with the students," Parks said, "and not with the president (Wood) and the trustees."

O'Keefe said he "will consider Parks' offer with the entire SGA ... and together we'll decide on whether to accept this offer or not."

Students want course evaluation info

By P.J. PROKOP
Collegian Staff

The public availability of information in student course evaluations is increasingly becoming a concern to some student groups on campus. The problem, according to Larry Magid, Director of the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER), was studied recently in his Student Interest Research Seminar. Magid said students were "genuinely concerned" with acquiring information for students in order to aid them in course selections. All the data collected, however, cannot be released, he added due policy that information cannot be released without the consent of the person involved. A poll released in SCER's course and teacher evaulation booklet revealed 94.6 per cent of 130 students polled were in favor of receiving evaluation information.

"We're not trying to threaten professors, I'm a professor myself, but students should have greater control over their academic environment, students have a right to know the quality of their education," Magid said.

Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage said the information collected in the evaluations, which have recently become mandatory, are reviewed only by the person involved, his or her dean, and a faculty-elected personnel committee. Gage added that the evaluations are used for determining tenure and re-appointment for professors.

Sheryl Riechmann, Director of the Center for Instructional Resources and Improvements (CIRI) said that there hasn't been a clear determination from the lawyers they have been working with concerning the legality of the issue. "We don't want this to be a legal issue, it concerns the public and would be useful to students," she said.

Riechmann added that many decisions haven't been made regarding the format for collecting the data, who should pay for it, and how it should be presented. She also said, "There has been support for the idea of having teachers respond to data before it is printed, and perhaps adding comments to the information presented."

Riechmann said the situation is going to be studied this summer and student reactions would be sought concerning the matter in order to see how useful the information would be to students, and faculty.

Residential Life candidates notified

By Cindy Rogers
Collegian Staff

The two top candidates for director of Residential Life (ORL) will be notified today, according to Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage.

Patrick Latorre, director of housing at the University of California at Davis and Joel Rudy, dean of student residential life at Kent State were selected Monday by the Search committee for new director of residential life, (SCNDRL) according to Robert Campbell, ORL operational manager and committee member.

The new director will replace acting director Kenneth Dean. Dean was not an applicant, said Gage.

The search committee, composed of students and administrative staff, has been reviewing the four top candidates in the last three weeks. SCNDRL conducted a nationwide search and received applicants from all over the country.

Judy DiMatiia, director of housing at Princeton University and James Moy, dean of students at Wartsborg College in Waverly, Iowa were not recommended.

According to Campbell, Latorre has his PhD in Student Personnel and Educational Psychology from the University of Colorado, his MA from Indiana University and BA from West Virginia. He is 32 years old.

"His experiential background is varied but extensive," Campbell said. He was chosen for his philosophy and Campbell also said he was a good listener.

Rudy received his Masters of Sociology at Kent State and has 20 credits towards his PhD. He received his BA at Bethany College in West Virginia and is 34.

The Office of Residential Life which oversees the staff and funding of the residence halls was established last year, replacing a divided operation. Previously, Gage was in charge of the programs and heads of residence and former Vice-Chancellor Thomas B. Campion was in charge of the business end of the residence halls.

"Joel Rudy is a strong managerial type, Campbell said. "His job is more encumbering than we are looking for."

Bromery recommends economics profs for tenure

Two economics professors whose names were not brought up to trustees along with other faculty granted tenure last week have received a favorable recommendation from Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, the Collegian learned last night.

The two, Profs. Che S. Tsao and Arthur W. Wright, will be recommended to the President's office for tenure. Earlier, the two were recommended along with Prof. Michael H. Best by department colleagues and the Executive Committee of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

But former Vice-Chancellor Robert L. Gluckstern decided not to recommend Tsao and Wright to trustees.

Economics dept. faculty had criticized the tenure denials because Best is a self-described "radical" and the other two are more moderate in their ideological frameworks. They said the tenure decisions were "political" in nature.

Student suspended for violating code

Director of Southwest residential area Richard Green said last night that Dean of Students William Field has ruled that the student who dropped a four pound weight from a Washington Tower window be suspended for one semester.

Green said that the student, whom he would identify only as being a freshman, violated the Southwest guidelines of endangering behavior, and was asked to vacate his room as of yesterday.

The incident occurred Saturday night.

Helicopters pluck Marines from small-arms Tang fire destroyers remain behind circling the island in case there were stragglers.

The Thai government had demanded that the entire Marine force, including those who actually participated in the assault, be removed by yesterday.

The disengagement under fire ended a three-day confrontation in which the fledgling Khmer Rouge government lost its challenge to the will of the United States, humbled so recently by defeats of its Southeast Asian allies.

Military officials said that "intermittent and heavy" fire of Communist troops kept the U.S. rescue force pinned for hours after the recovery of the container ship Mayaguez and its 39-man crew. Finally, under cover of dark and a protective barrage from U.S. planes and two destroyers, the choppers lifted out the Leathernecks.

Shortly after the Marines had charged onto Koh Tang and boarded the Mayaguez — only to find it empty — the entire crew was spotted, waving white flags, aboard a Thai fishing vessel. The U.S. destroyer Wilson took the 39 Americans aboard and returned them to their ship.

Pentagon sources said that according to the initial debriefing of the captain of the Mayaguez, the crewmen had been removed from Koh Tang long before the Marine assault.

The sources said the captain reported the entire crew was taken onto Koh Tang shortly after their capture Monday.

Just where they had been held before the attack was not clear. Their Cambodian captors apparently had forced the five Thais on the fishing boat to take them aboard, then put out to sea.

The Mayaguez, owned by Sea-Land Services, Inc., of Menlo Park, N.J., was captured by Cambodian gunboats Monday night. Though the precise position of the ship has not been definitely established, a company spokesman said its course did not bring it within 70 miles of Cambodian territory.

UMass expected to be named site for Kennedy library archives invitations and suggestions, and had narrowed these to the University of Massachusetts campuses at Amherst and Boston.

The announcement, which said the corporation no longer was considering placing the museum in the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, said corporation directors will meet in June to make a final decision on a site.

"There is great symbolic value in being identified with the university, which belongs to all the people of Massachusetts," the announcement said.

"Both University of Massachusetts sites are readily accessible to students and scholars from a number of other colleges and universities."

The corporation announced last February that it would look into the possibility of locating the museum outside of Cambridge in order to leave the archives near Harvard University, the late president's alma mater.

"Building the archives in Cambridge would not leave enough money to construct a separate building for the museum, thus the search was limited to the possibility of putting the museum in an existing building," the announcement said.

"The Kennedy Center was the only one of several museum possibilities which seemed realistic.

"To date, no museum opportunities in existing buildings in Massachusetts have presented themselves," the corporation said.

Original plans called for building the museum and archives in Cambridge, but complaints from residents near the Harvard Square area that it would result in congestion in that area.

At Amherst, a UMass spokesman said Chancellor Randolph Bromery would make no immediate comment.

Corporation officials said they did not believe placing the archives in Cambridge and the museum in Washington would work for several reasons. They said a museum in Washington would suffer by being separated from archival material and from the library staff.

"Washington is so rich in museum and visitor attractions that the Kennedy Museum would have an average visitor duration of only 15 or 20 minutes," the announcement said. It said this would make the museum program "a more static, less educational experience than it would be if it were combined with the archives in Massachusetts."

The corporation also said that, if placed at the Washington center, the museum would have to be located in what is now a garage.

It also said it would be hard to give the museum "a strong identity within the center, which itself is a very lively and active institution.

Governing Board demands food director resignation

By Jan Alexander
Collegian Staff

After a one hour executive session the Board of Governors last night approved a motion calling for the immediate resignation of Phil Amico, director of food services.

"Due to unsatisfactory performance and a total lack of confidence in his ability to effectively operate the food service department of the Campus Center," was the reason stated in the motion.

"Through eight months of this year," said Board chairperson Jeffry Taggert, "Phil Amico's operating expences have increased over the same time period in fiscal '74 by approximately $140,000.

"Sales for the eight month period have increased $19,000 over the same period of last year. On this basis and subsequent financial data we have received, the Board of Governors feels he's not performing, he's not doing his job."

Taggart said that Amico's unsatisfactory performance allowed the Oliva (Steve) Stephano wedding bill to remain unbilled and unpaid for a period of eight months before bringing it to the attention of the billing office.

Stephano was the Campus Center purchasing and production manager and a subordinate of Amico. He resigned last month due to health reasons.

The bill was for an August 15 wedding reception held in the Campus Center, in excess of $2,000, and according to Taggert has not been paid yet.

Taggert said that the unwritten agreement allowing Amico to have use of the Campus Center hotel room was "totally legitimate." The agreement was made at the time of his hiring so that Amico would not have to commute from his house in Connecticut.

The motion must now go to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery who said last night that the motion was "a vote of no confidence," but that it would be "inappropriate" for him to comment on it now.

"I'm not exactly familiar with all the details," Bromery said. "I'll be meeting with Gage this summer to discuss all the rumors and all allegations concerning the Campus Center to see what's going on."

Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage and Director of Campus Center John Corker have the final say over Amico's firing, according to Bromery.

In regard to the change of the sign on the Student Union building to read "Student Unionization," John Corker said at last night's meeting that the board was placed in a compromising situation.

"The building regulations should be honored and maintained by everyone on campus," he said. "The people who placed the sign on the building owed the board the consideration to ask if an exception to the rule could be made.

"It was unappropriate and obviously unrealistic. A confrontation never wins anything. The board should act strongly and firmly."

Collegian through except for summer

Today is the final issue of The Collegian for the semester. The newspaper will resume publication on a daily basis on registration day in September.

For the first time ever, The Collegian will publish during summer school, but on a weekly basis. Editorial offices will be in the Student Union, but not in the regular offices.

Summer Editors are Daniel LaBonte and Debbie Schafer. All material for publication should be mailed to Editor, The Summer Collegian, Student Union Bldg., UMass-Amherst, 01002.

Announcements, classifieds, news, letters and other material received today or later will be held for the summer editors and published if timely. Otherwise it will be held and published on its merits in the first fall issue.

The board of editors thanks readers for support during a critical semester of awakening student concern on issues and apologizes for inaccuracies or oversights in news coverage.

VIPhone receives questions on govt.

"How can I get a stop sign installed on my street?" asked an anxious caller to a volunteer of the League of Women Voters Voter Information Phone. The caller explained that she lived near a busy intersection where there have been many accidents over the years.

The League of Women Voters volunteer explained that permission to install all traffic lights and stop signs in the Commonwealth must be received from the state Department of Public Works regardless of whether they are to be placed on a municipally owned or state owned throughfare, and the request must come from a municipal body of local government or the DPW itself.

Once the municipal body agrees to submit the request to a district DPW office, the district office investigates and grants or denies the issuance of a permit depending on whether the light or sign is warranted. The caller was told to contact her local selectman or local Department of Public Works to start the necessary procedures.

This is one of the questions now being received by the League of Women Voters Voter Information Phone. Individuals with any questions on government may call the VIPhone Monday through Friday between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. The number in the Boston area is 357-5880. Outside the Boston metropolitan area callers should dial the toll-free number 1-800-882-1649.

N.E. cyclists to compete Memorial Day

75 cyclists from all over New England will compete in a 30-mile bike race on a one-mile course around Southwest at 1 p.m., Monday.

The "Memorial Day Criterium" promoted by Valley Cycle Club and the UMass Bicycle Club, will feature $600 in prizes from Cannondale Corporation and Raleigh Industries of America, with additional prizes from local merchants to the leaders of special sprint laps. An announcer will be posted at the finish area on Sunset Ave. to describe the race's progress west down Massachusetts Ave., through a screeching left turn onto University Drive, left again onto a climb up Fearing Street, then left to a sprint down Sunset. The hill on Fearing Street is expected to take its toll by the 30th ascent.

A criterium is a bike race usually held on a short course near the center of a town. For the spectator this offers much more visibility than a long point-to-point or one circuit race, but the rider must deal with problems not found in the longer races. Cornering is so frequent that position going into turns becomes a major tactical consideration. The back of a pack of riders suffers from an "accordian" effect: the front riders brake going into the corner and then accelerate out of the turn, but as they increase their speed the back riders are still slowing down. This stretches out the pack and forces the following riders to work hard to close the distance.

Workers' incomes, balance of payments

2 economic indicators rise sharply

By Richard Hughes
UPI Business Writer

Two measurements of the nation's economic health — the balance of payments in foreign transactions and the personal income of American workers — show major improvements, the government said yesterday.

The Commerce Department said the U.S. balance of payments as measured by cash transactions recorded a surplus of $2.62 billion from January through March.

It was the first time this measurement has been in the black since the last three months of 1973 and followed a $7.41 billion deficit in the last quarter of 1974. It also was the largest surplus for any quarter since such record keeping was started in 1960.

The net liquidity surplus, the department said in a report based on preliminary data, was created by an improved trade situation, a decline in foreign loans by U.S. banks and by an $1.3 billion increase in foreign investment in U.S. stocks and bonds.

The department also a second measurement of the balance of payments, the "official reserve transactions balance," improved in the first quarter, although it remained in the red.

This index moved from a $4.53 billion deficit in the last quarter of 1974 to a $2.81 billion deficit in the past three months.

In a separate report, Commerce said personal income of Americans grew $6.7 billion in April, following an increase of $2.3 billion in March. The overall April growth was 0.6 per cent.

The most significant increase was a $1.7 billion of rise in farm income to $20.1 billion. This was the first increase in farm income in seven months.

In the nonfarm sector, a $1.6 billion surge in government payments was responsible for much of the increase. Private payrolls remained unchanged after recording a $1 billion gain in March.

Government payments in the form of social security, welfare, unemployment compensation and veterans benefits soared to $169.9 billion.

An increase in personal income is considered by economists to be necessary to helping restore consumer confidence and encourage consumers to spend more, thus promoting production.

Harvard economist sees jobless hike

By William Glasgall
Associated Press Writer

LEXINGTON (AP) The nation's 8.9 per cent unemployment rate is likely to rise to 9.2 per cent by June, but will be almost five times as high among black teenagers, a Harvard economist predicts.

Otto Eckstein, president of Data Resources Inc. and a White House adviser under President Johnson, says in the DRI May forecast that 8.4 million people will be out of work by next month.

Joblessness among black teenagers will hit 43.4 per cent, while among white youths, the unemployment rate will reach 19.2 per cent, the forecast says.

In part, this is due to the annual influx of youths seeking summer jobs, DRI says. Yet, "the recession will limit the upward mobility of young workers" who may "refrain from acquiring new skills."

Overall, DRI predicts unemployment to remain high for the next two years, falling back to 7.7 per cent by the end of 1976 and to 7 per cent by the end of 1977.

Eckstein, a former White House economics adviser under President Johnson, believes the continued high unemployment will dampen wage demands and will help keep inflation in check.

The Consumer Price Index will rise only 4.5 per cent by the end of this year, he says, an average hourly earnings will rise 8.8 per cent.

Although wholesale food prices will decline 7.6 per cent this year, says Eckstein, the price cuts won't filter down to the retain level.

Increased costs for cans, paper products, glass containers, transportation and labor will offset falling farm prices and will pace a 6.3 per cent rise in processed food prices, he says.

3 strikers arrested in Somerville

SOMERVILLE (AP) — Three policemen were injured and three strikers arrested in a confrontation at picket lines at the regional warehouse of First National Stores yesterday.

The police department said two officers were hit with baseball bats and a third was hit by a Finast truck in the clash, which occurred as about 100 striking Teamsters tried to prevent eight company trucks from leaving the warehouse with nonunion drivers.

Union members said police fired tear gas at the strikers.

Police said the strikers retaliated with bricks, bottles, stones and baseball bats.

The injured officers were treated at Somerville Hospital and released. The three arrested strikers faced disorderly conduct charges.

The strikers disabled three of the trucks, cutting fuel and air lines and smashing windshields. The drivers abandoned the vehicles about 200 yards from the picket lines.

The strike by Teamsters Local 829 began Monday after a breakdown of contract negotiations.

Finast vice president Peter C. Quinn said the warehouse "contains food products which must be removed for they are perishable... We hope that the labor difficulties can be settled quickly and peacefully."

The trucks involved in the incident were loaded with meat.

Grape Island Incident remembered this weekend

HINGHAM, Mass. (UPI) — It's known as the Grape Island Incident. And here tinkers, tailors, fishermen and farmers set fire to tons of hay the British wanted for their horses.

The residents of this South Shore town this weekend will remember the colonial tradesmen by setting afire a bale of hay on Button Island in Hingham Harbor in a re-enactment of the 200th anniversary of the incident.

"Danger, you know, sometimes makes timid men bold," Abigail Adams said of the embattled colonists in the Grape Island Incident.

On May 21, 1775, three British sloops and a cutter were seen anchored just below Great Hill, Weymouth.

Mrs. Adams, in a still preserved letter, wrote that the roads were "full of folk" from Germantown a part of Quincy, Braintree, Weymouth and Hingham, all heading for safety in the countryside since they feared a British invasion. Abigail was the wife of John Adams and the mother of John Quincy Adams.

"They say three hundred men have landed somewhere and our Minutemen are mustering. There'll be no church this Sabbath," she wrote.

Minutemen and militia poured into Hingham and Weymouth from towns as far as 40 miles away "until 2,000 were collected," according to Mrs. Adams.

Only then did they realize that the British were "raiding" Grape Island to get hay for their horses, vegetables and possibly some cattle for the Redcoats in Boston.

The island was owned or controlled by Elisha Leavitt, a Tory — friendly to the British cause, who it later was learned had provided supplies to the English. Leavitt lived in an old-fashioned, stately mansion in Hingham which had a secret door and a blind passage to provide a hideaway for Tories in danger.

Marijuana hunt included in town's community projects

DOWAGIAC, Mich. (UPI) — The Dowagic Junior Chamber of Commerce has drawn up its list of community projects for the rest of the year — a cancer clinic, bicycle safety program, junior gold tournament — and wild marijuana hunt.

And no volunteers, please for the pot patrol.

"Last time," said Joseph Silvia, president of the 53-member group, "some guys joined us and one of them got into trouble after he made a marijuana headband."

The unusual project is the latest salvo in a long war against marijuana that police say covers about 70 of the 32,000 acres of Cass County in the southwest corner of the state on the Indiana border.

The marijuana, also known as hemp, was grown by farmers during World War II to make rope because normal overseas shipments of hemp were interrupted.

Most farmers plowed the weed under after the war, but birds and wind carried the seed to other parts of the country and the illegal weed flourishes to this day in some hedgerows and ditches.

"There's a large quantity, I'll say that," said Capt. Paul Parrish of the Cass County Sheriff's Department. "We sprayed it for the last three years, but that didn't work. Neither did burning or cutting."

That gave the Jaycees an idea — pull the plants out by the root and burn them.

"We'll get started when the plants are six or eight inches tall," Silvia said. "The crop got off to a slow start this year because spring was late but I think we can get started in a couple of weeks."

Some Jaycees, he said, may not recognize marijuana weeds when they see them.

Eclipse to be seen here May 25

CAMBRIDGE (UPI) — A total eclipse of the moon will be visible over North America May 25 for the first time in three years, weather permitting, according to scientists here.

Astronomers at the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory said the moon is to be in total eclipse of 1:03 a.m. (EDT), May 25, and will stay that way for an hour and 30 minutes. They said it would be visible "simultaneously over almost an entire hemisphere."

The eclipse is only of minor interest to professional astronomers, they said, but is of great interest to amateurs and the general public. The moon is to begin entering the outer shadow of the earth at 10:59 p.m. May 24, and will leave the eclipse at 4:38 a.m.

Letters to the Editor

Combination of the two?

A group called "Citizens for the John F. Kennedy library at Amherst" has recently been formed to promote location of the library at UMass. No one seems to want this place in their own back yard, and the group will probably fail as a result.

But there is also an effort on campus to name our new University Library. So there is at UMass a group of citizens with a name for a library, but no library, and another group (students) with a library, and no name for it. Perhaps these two groups could collaborate, and name our building the "John F. Kennedy Memorial Library", thereby saving millions of dollars.

A floor or two could be renovated to house any Kennedy paraphernalia kicking around, to satisfy historians and tourists; surely the world's tallest library could make such an accommodation with little inconvenience! The minor logistical problems like elevator malfunctions and inadequate parking space would surely be outweighed by the sheer economy of housing two libraries in one building. In view of the fact that the country is going broke, we owe ourselves the responsibility of giving this proposal incredibly profound and serious consideration.

Precedent may turn into episode

It is reassuring to learn that two of my colleagues, Professors Rapping and Resnick, (see opposite page), disassociated themselves, in a statesmanlike manner, from the spirit which animated, last Fall, the concerted action against granting tenure to Professors Tsao and Wright. That threatened to become a precedent may thus turn out to have been a mere episode, in which case it will be happily forgotten.

Women's trophies not displayed

The article written by Dave Eibel Wednesday about the dilemma the Athletic Department is facing with the Federal Government's Title IX unfortunately makes the readers feel sorry for them. I certainly don't! Even though there is such a discrepancy with the allocation of funds, there are other ways to create equality in intercollegiate athletics which the Athletic Department has not pursued. One example I can speak of is why won't the Athletic Department allow woman's trophies in the display case inside Boyden? The women's gymnastics team received National honors this season yet their trophy is sitting on top of a bookshelf along with the women's ski team's hard earned trophy. This action is just as important for the equality of intercollegiate athletics to be achieved and putting the women's trophies doesn't cost anything either.

Crowd chanted 'jump'

Recently, a group of UMass students exercised their right to free speech. It is unclear whether their raised voices helped to bring about their cause — which was, in fact, realized. Nevertheless, the philosophical stance of this group was delivered decisively and articulately.

They chanted for the denial of human life.

Crowd hysteria, flippancy and intoxication do not suffice as excuses for the demonstration of such feeling.

At odd moments during the next fifty or sixty years, these "demonstrators" may well wonder how they were capable of shouting "Jump!" to David Harpin. They may also idly wonder whether their chants helped hurl his confused person into the blue sky.

Soccing it to sexism

On behalf of all women participants in the 1975 Intramural Soccer League, I would like to bring to your attention a series of events which I consider to be detrimental to the reputation of the IM Department, and offensive to all women participants. The events to which I refer took place between Monday, May 12, and Wednesday, May 14, particularly concerning the overall lack of staffing at the championships which were finally completed at 7:30 p.m. today, May 14.

Perhaps the reason for two games on one evening should also be clarified. On Monday, May 12, teams were prepared to play the semifinals games. Through a scheduling error, both first place teams played each other. After protest, the entire championship sequence was rescheduled for this evening.

First, in our semifinals game, women were provided with only one official and one lineman, who was not supplied with a whistle. That person's job obviously became difficult and inadequate as well. In direct contrast, the men's game was provided with two officials and a linesperson who did have a whistle. In the finals game, two officials were provided along with a lineman who still had no whistle, but this was possible only because of a forfeit on the next field. Secondly, there was no Supervisor on the field throughout the final game, and I will find any excuses difficult to understand.

Finally, I am appalled that absolutely no provision was made for accidents or injuries at a University sponsored championship event. As it happened, a member of the championship team received a blow to the face which resulted in a fractured nose. It is only your fortune that individual team members present were personally trained in first aid to the injured. Without question, any damage incurred by neglect or by the actions of untrained persons would be the responsibility of your department.

I hold the IM Dept. responsible to act in accordance with clear-cut University sanctions against implicit or overt sexism in the organization and administration of University programs. I urge you to insure that the events described above are not repeated.

By B. J. Roche

See ya later

It's happened again; the Collegian had a photographer and reporter there, and we all rushed to our typewriters to write columns on the occurance. People standing around watching, and the conversation turns to "that McGilvray cartoon" and intellectual raps on the merits and drawbacks of suicide. Everybody's got a rap. Those who are upset are labelled "overdramatic," and those who go on drinking and laughing are called "callous." And Jack tells me, "Ha, now you gotta change your editorial!" So hell, I changed it. And after awhile, the shock wears off (I didn't even know the guy) and each time it happens, it doesn't seem to hurt as much as the time before. I guess I'm getting old.

And it's the last issue of the year — oh what a headache. The rhetoric and bullshit doesn't flow off the typewriter like it used to; every headline and piece of copy is a tooth waiting to be pulled. And there's not even any ether or good pot around. It's time to sift through all the "Farewell" and "So Long Sucker" columns from Seniors, all the letters that never got printed, all the junk one accumulates in this office over a semester. The in-house (and outhouse) Collegian conflicts have quelled for another three months, and everyone is tired, bored, graduating and-or all three. It's too late in the semester to fall in love, and there's not much time before finals to get high. What's the use?

And then comes the ray of hope. The last final, the last reference on the bibliography list and the final lab fee is about to be paid. Furlough to the real world, where three months is enough and we're rarin' to get back. But many are receiving their walking papers, honorable discharges of sorts, and to them I wish all the cosmic cheer necessary to endure what they'll be up against. Campusambians no more: Congrats to Judy, Steve, Chris, Trippa, Mike, and of course, the Nurd. And oh yeah, Mace, Cindy, Johnny B., Wa Ta Tom, and the invincible trio of McGilvray, Fishman and BoBo...May your caps remain ever straight, and your gowns clean. I'll be back next year (ready or not) with more futile complaints and unheeded tirades. In the meantime I'm on the beach, frying my body to match my brain.

Cliche number 241: Have a good summer.

B.J. Roche is fading fast.

That's the way it is

Graduation. It's always been like this. I mean the time it takes to fully accept the full impact of some important event. It was like this when they shot Bobby Kennedy, when Armstrong took his first hesitant steps on the moon, when Nixon announced his resignation.

Strange, though, that it shouldn't be like this today, as I start climbing up the steep dirt path to Orchard Hill, after making my way through the Spring Festival crowds in front of the Hatch. The blistering sun cannot reach into the cool shadows of the woods surrounding me. I hear creatures stirring under the dried leaves of last Fall, as the prevalence of Spring jumps out at me from the fat green of newly unfurled leaves and the fragile scent of wild violets lining the wayside.

So this is life also, I meditate. How different from the life we are used to living, the life that people tell us we should live, "modern" life. Nobody here shouting out "Perform! Perform!", lest that bird chirping overhead knows something I don't.

So I'll be out of this University in two weeks. Big deal. Who cares? What so much different waits out there in the big world? Nothing really. Money? Maybe. Fame? Hardly. A house in the suburbs? Heaven forbid. A refreshing breeze passes through the undergrowth. How about UMass? How will it be able to go on without me, how will I be able to function without it? We'll both manage somehow, I guess.

The problems we both face are still many, but they are no longer the same. UMass could care less, if I find a job come September or just bum out, if I become a member of the elitist intellectual or the American-Dream-Archie-Bunker class. But then again why should it care? A thorny branch reaching out from one of the many hedges left and right scratches my hand, then is left behind, as I continue my ascent up the hill.

Why is it that I still care about UMass? Questions, so many questions are bothering me. What will students be facing next semester? A semester bill they can no longer afford to pay, the absence of vital programs they have grown so accustomed to as to take them for granted? Who will be doing the talking? Will it still be some left-wing extremist group that thinks it has all the answers and bolds itself to act in the name of all students? Or will other students with different though equally valid views be incorporated to strike (no pun intended) a healthy balance? Will students finally realize that in striving for their goals of union they must be willing to compromise, rather than to reap division by failing to look at both sides? A ray of sunlight breaks through the lofty treetops and comes to rest on a patch of moss ahead.

Oh, but I am confident that students will see that the best and most promising way to deal with "the establishment" is to use "the establishment's" recognized methods. Chanting and demonstrating alone, if not followed by constructive input, will do more harm to a cause than good. The people at the top will not change if they are forced, nobody likes to bow to threats. But if we address ourselves to them as peers rather than as emotional children, the chances for reaching our objectives will be greatly heightened. Deep footprints in the dark moisture of the forest floor will tell the next passerby that I was here.

It's been a good three semesters here, despite the usual ups and downs. UMass undoubtedly has to be the most sexist, radical, elitist, primitive and bureaucratic university in the East. I love it. So people, keep up the good work (or rotten, whatever) and don't forget, you've got only one way to go from here: uphill all the way.

Thus are my thoughts as I reach the summit, Orchard Hill is drowsing in the broken heat, as dusk announces its coming. I nearly step on an exhausted bee taking a short rest on the ground before returning to its hive. I wonder if the bee knew how closely it had come to death. I wonder if it really cared.

Bye middle-of-the-road Tony, bye BJ, bye H. and Gilgamesh resurrected. So long Bill and Judy, who I won't have to bitch around anymore. As the man says: that's the way it is.

Mike Izdepski is stuck in the woods.

Editorial points

Now that we are all leaving for the summer, perhaps we will get a few decisions made around here.

— — — —

And they'll probably be lousy ones.

— — — —

Though it doesn't seem it at times, the Collegian is trying.

— — — —

Very trying.

— — — —

It's been a long year, pretty frustrating too. But cheer up. Next year promises to be even longer and more frustrating. And McGilvray won't be here to help us out with it.

— — — —

Things we'd like to see next year:
—cutting of the fat (How about the rhetoric dept.?)
—Michael Dukakis become a vegeterian.
—a little straight dealing from the administration.

Ah, but by then we'll have all graduated...

Happy sunning!

Tripoli's last lament

By Steve Tripoli

"Where freedom is not, there is my country."

—Thomas Paine (yes, I know that he isn't all the history books say he was, but I still like the quote.)

So this is the end of four years. What's it been all about? A bunch of things. People, experiences here at the paper, bitter experiences working in Congress on a UMass internship, a lot of things. But they all add up to one thing.

There's a lot coming down in the world today, and the vast majority of it isn't good. Now more than ever before we must realize that we — all of us — must face these problems together. Now. Or we'll all be gone before our natural lives run their cycle.

What is the problem? Oppression. By whoever, wherever, for whatever reason. No need to elaborate, it's everywhere, from the energy crisis to the world food shortage to the anti-busing rally down the street. What to do about it? First, recognize that it exists. Force yourself to recognize it everywhere you see it. It will be a pain in the ass, a real big one. But the rewards will be more than ample...

...Because once you begin to deal with it you will open new worlds to yourself that you never knew existed before, and you'll find them fascinating. And the revolution in your mind will touch other people. And YOU may change the world. Believe me, it took the entire four years that I've spent here to learn this, right up to the day this column was written. It was a long, hard, evolutionary process. But I'm proud of it — it's my college education.

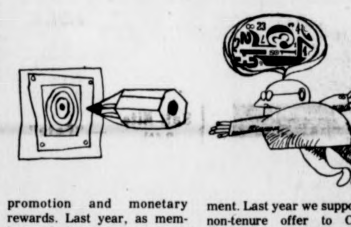
If the aforementioned change takes place in enough people's heads, something amazing is going to happen. Peace. But that word is a long way off, and not really worth mentioning now. Because people aren't recognizing the problem, and they aren't seeing that everyone must recognize it in the very near future AND begin to act on it. You, out there, can't hide or pass it on. It's on you to do it. Every one of you.

So this is my last column. I haven't spent it saying thanks, or I love you, to those who deserve it. You know who you are, and if you know me you realize that the sentiment is there. No, this column is for everyone. Get your education here, and get a good one. You'll have to find it yourself (hint: it ain't in most classrooms), but that's not hard.

If you don't build walls between you and that education, if you don't shun your responsibility, everything will be alright. And we'll all be really free, and that will be really cool. See ya.

Steve Tripoli is now an ex- Collegian Columnist.

In defense of academic integrity



It is with deep regret that we have been forced by Professor Holesovsky into writing this reply in defense of our integrity as scholars and as citizens of this University.

There has been repeated accusations by Professor Holesovsky that we, as so-called radicals, have acted in a concerned manner to prevent favorable tenure decisions for Professors Tsao and Wright because they do not share our ideological views. These accusations have appeared in several intra-university memoranda and in a letter to the New York Times. More recently these charges have appeared in this paper. These accusations are false, irresponsible and render a great disservice to this University. But their repetition appears to serve Professor Holesovsky's self-interest.

Both of us are especially annoyed by these charges because we have devoted considerable time and energy over the past two years to accomodate in good faith the varied interests within the department and to stress the importance of undergraduate instruction. We think our record supports this claim.

Both of us have repeatedly supported non-radical members of this department for promotion and monetary rewards. Last year, as members of the personnel committee, we supported unusually large merit increases for three non-radical members of the department. We also voted for the re-appointment of another non-radical faculty member. This year we argued for an early tenure decision in the case of one faculty member and in the case of another member we supported as early full-professorship. Both of us also supported the reappointment of two non-radical faculty members this semester. In all of these cases we were convinced that the relevant faculty members were deserving of these benefits.

Both of us have devoted considerable time and energy in attempting to hire neoclassical micro theorists in this department. Last year we supported a non-tenure offer to Charles Wilson and a tenure offer to Walter Heller, Jr. and Professor Mukul Majumdar. This year we were successful in finally attracting two excellent micro theorists to this department, one a full professor and the other an assistant professor. We think both of them are good economists and by no stretch of the imagination can they or others who we supported in this area be considered radicals. In fact, it is doubtful if these economists would have joined this department if not for our continued work in building a department that has quickly developed an international reputation for excellence and one that this University and state can be proud of.

We made a concentrated effort while in San Francisco at the American Economic Association meeting this past December to induce Vernon Smith, a well known micro theorist, but hardly a "radical," to return to this department. This was an effort on our part to raise the standards of the department in that area.

Both of us were strong supporters of Robert Coen, an excellent neoclassical macro economist, and indeed we spent considerable time in attempting to induce him to join the faculty of this department in the year following his semester visit to the University. We have repeatedly acted on our position that we would support excellence regardless of ideological views.

Finally, in the interests of internal peace and in order to permit the members of this department to meet their teaching, research, and service obligations to this University, we have never formally responded to personal attacks or to the general harassment which we have experienced during the past several months. Unfortunately, the continuing attacks on our academic integrity make it impossible for us to ignore them any longer.

We understand the functional role that personal attacks play in helping Professor Holesovsky to achieve his objectives. But this tactic is destructive, and in the end the successful use of these tactics will destroy what is now an excellent economics department. Both of us have worked hard to build this department and we will continue our efforts, but we cannot continue to operate successfully under a constant barrage of personal attacks. We must defend ourselves against such attacks and it is with this purpose in mind that we have reluctantly written this memorandum to you.

So there may be no misunderstanding concerning our purpose in writing this letter, we wish to reiterate our position with respect to the present undecided tenure cases. We support the majority decision of this department.

Both of us recognize and deeply appreciate the confidence and support which we have received from the administration, students, and faculty of this University. We regret the extent to which the internal affairs of this department have infringed on space in this paper. Over the past two years we have worked to build unity and stability within a department that was deeply divided before we arrived. We will continue these efforts in the years to come. We would hope that Professor Holesovsky would do the same.

Nightmares in Bureaucracy

By E. Patrick McQuaid

Stately, proud, electric speaker walked down the steps of mounted beacon, crossed the street paralleled in blue, forged the stream of pressing matter and faced the howling mob.

Just one more please! Quote me over my head, if you will, don't these people know their god is dead? Your prophet is lost in shifting sands along the cape shore, and half buried pyramids of economic crisis; inverted for literary stature. We remember those cold November days on the playing field of "Rah-rah-rah" this doomed star is exhausted. The light has gone out, the earth in darkness. The fruits of summer are withered, the ear in its husk. Silent world; hush, hush, hush.

It was at that time that I heard the sirens calling, calling, calling. Those reds flashing in fullness of blue-falling star; — there's the catch———.

Just one more please!

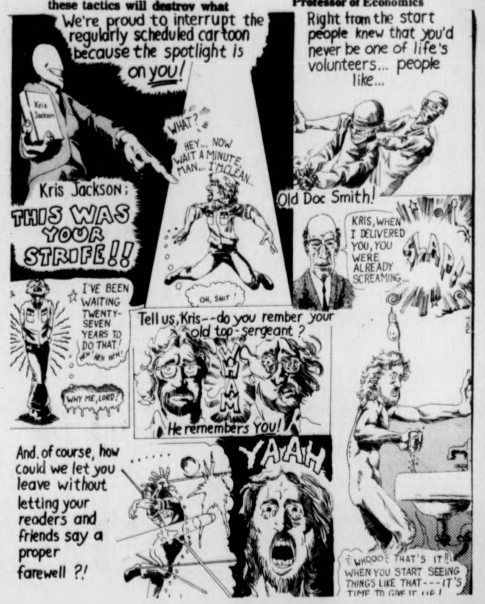
Alzo sprach l'etranger: Go, Pound, Sand; and the rest of you. Go kick the prick that died with the twenties. They tried your game as we try your name and failed as we fail and fall.

The hour, farther than we believe; as he chalked his cue, please bare with me; heavenly art and hallowed ground, down, down, down.

In crowded conference, forgive us our presspasses as we forgive those who press asses against us. Who'se quoting whose?

Thirty-thirty-thirty.

E. Patrick McQuaid was associate-Executive-editor of the Collegian (sometimes).



We're proud to interrupt the regularly scheduled cartoon because the spotlight is on you!

Bike-a-thon to visit Amherst

We're looking for people who would like to spend a pleasant Sunday afternoon bicycling through the Amherst countryside.

Each year the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens sponsors a series of fund raising Bike-a-thons in various cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth. This Sunday, the Bike-a-thon comes to Amherst.

The event is a 15 mile bike ride over a circular course. Riders will leave from the Amherst Community Field on Triangle St.; coast down Main St. to South East St.; travel southward to South Amherst; westward along Pomeroy Lane to South Maple St. in Hadley; northward along Maple to Meadow and Pine Streets in North Amherst; and southward again along East Pleasant St. back to Community Field. There will be frequent rest stops and check points along the way. By completing the 15 mile ride it is possible for riders to help raise from five to ten thousand dollars.

All of the money collected will benefit the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens which distributes funds to its regional chapters, including the Hampshire County Association which has sponsored community group homes for the retarded in Northampton and Belchertown, a nursery school and day care programs for retarded children, Scouting, and a summer day camp.

Many individuals and groups from Amherst have already volunteered their help at this point. They represent faculty, administrators, parents, and University, Hampshire College, the Amherst-Pelham Teachers Association, clubs, and commercial establishments. More help is needed, and volunteers are encouraged to participate. In addition to riders the Bike-a-thon welcomes the aid of financial supporters, check point captains, and registration and publicity workers.

Area waitresses discuss jobs

An open meeting for all area waitresses interested in discussing working conditions and waitresses' job rights will be held on Monday from 7:30 P.M. to 9 P.M. at 200 Main Street, Northampton.

The meeting, sponsored by the Job Action Center for Waitresses, will focus on the wages paid to waitresses and tipping. The effects of tipping and wages on waitresses work, and the advantages and disadvantages of pooling tips, not working for tips, and methods of standardizing tipping practices will be discussed.

All interested waitresses are invited to attend. For further information, please contact the Valley Women's Union, 200 Main Street, Northampton, 586-2011.

Thousands of North Viet soldiers will settle in South Vietnam

By Matt Franjola
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — Thousands of soldiers who marched South over the years will not return home but will settle down in South Vietnam, interviews with some of them show.

The troops' first loyalty is to the revolution and they follow whatever orders they receive from higher authorities, they say.

Some soldiers indicated they would be demobilized in the South and strongly encouraged to marry local girls.

The doctrinaire, well disciplined and motivated Northern soldiers put the advancement of the country above their personal wants.

An artilleryman from Hanoi, S. Sgt. Tran Dinh Lam, 25, said: "I will go and do whatever job they tell me to do. I was a student before joining the army seven years ago but I can learn any trade including farming if they instruct me so."

A Southern cadre with 18 years in the liberation movement, Tran Quoc Viet, said: "Shortly men and women cadres will be given opportunities to be introduced to one another with the idea of eventual marriage if the two people are so inclined and agree."

The integration of Northern soldiers into the South appears to be a deliberate move to aid in the reunification of Vietnam by linking families in the North and South via marriage.

The family unit is the strongest entity in Vietnam. No matter how far removed a relative may be, the blood bond ensures adhesion.

Another reason may be the fact that there are relatively few Southern Provisional Revolutionary Government cadres and officials spread throughout the 20 million people of South Vietnam and the integration into the families of Southerners may be a way of building the governmental structure and ensuring loyalty.

Hoang Dinh Thanh, 24, an infantryman from Thanh Binh, North Vietnam, said, "I will not be returning to the North. I will marry and settle in the South. There is a lot of land that needs to be cultivated."

The majority of PRG troops throughout Saigon and the provinces come from the North. Only in the Mekong Delta does it appear that local people are in control. However, it seems that all major decisions are being referred to Hanoi, which probably will emerge as the capital of a unified Vietnam when it occurs.

As a way to prevent any counterrevolutionary activity, Northern combat troops are being sent deep into the Mekong Delta, where, in some places, they had never been before.

They are already ensconced in the northern three-fourths of South Vietnam.

Dukakis to file welfare cuts bill

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis planned to file his long awaited welfare cutting legislation today, including a bill to bump thousands of persons off General Relief.

The package of legislation also was expected to include a one-year freeze on hospital rates, and a $500-a-day fine for violations.

Dukakis announced plans to cut welfare costs by some $311 million a month ago.

One of the bills would make employable persons ineligible for General Relief. This measure was written in the wake of a recent U.S. District Court ruling in Boston which said individuals could not be denied assistance on the basis of age.

Dukakis originally wanted to exclude persons under 40 from General Relief if they are considered employable.

The administration was hopeful the new legislation would circumvent the court's ruling.

Bill filed to allow persons protection from intruders

BOSTON (UPI) — A Massachusetts state lawmaker yesterday filed a bill to allow a person to protect himself by any reasonable means — including force — against a criminal intruder in his home.

The bill seeks to reverse the effect of a recent state Supreme Court decision which held that an individual does not have an absolute right to defend himself against an intruder.

In the recent case of Commonwealth vs. Shaffer the court said:

"The defendant asks us in this case to adopt the majority rule that one assaulted in his own home need not retreat before resorting to the use of deadly force.

"It is hoped that this bill will send a message to the criminal element of the commonwealth that if they invade the privacy of a home their rights will be left at the doorstep," McCarthy said.

The case leading to the decision involved a Sharon, Mass., woman who shot and killed a man in her home. She was convicted of manslaughter in Superior Court and the conviction was upheld by the Supreme Court.

The court said its decision "gives due recognition to the value of human life, and requires that all available means for escape be exhausted."

"This is quite frankly an obnoxious principle of law," said sponsor Terrence P. McCarthy, I-Oak Bluffs.

"The court, in effect, is affirming a principle of law which would require any innocent person attacked within the confines of his own home to flee from his attacker rather than put the life of the attacker in jeopardy."

LOCAL BRIEFS

Honor Society

The installation ceremonies of the UMass Chapter of the National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi will take place today at 4:45 P.M. in Hasbrouck 20. The primary objective of the Honor Society is the recognition and encouragement of superior scholarship in all academic disciplines.

Approximately five per cent of this year's senior and junior class have been declared eligible for membership. In addition, twenty-one members of the freshman class and six members of the sophomore class will be awarded certificates in recognition of their high scholastic achievements.

Guest speaker at the ceremonies will be Professor Laszlo Tikos, who will talk on Human Rights in the Soviet Union. Tikos is the Head of the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures, Chairman of the Center for the Study of New Russian Literature, and Co-Author of an anthology on Russian underground poetry. Members of Phi Kappa Phi, inductees, guests, and the entire university community are all heartily invited.

The UMass Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, first established in 1904, was the fourth chapter to be established among some 150 chapters throughout the United States and the Philippines. The first chapter was established at the University of Maine in 1897.

Books, records wanted

The University Library is collecting books and records of all kinds for next fall's third annual Friends of the Library (FOL) book sale.

Records and books, paper covered or hard bound, on all subjects in resaleable condition will be welcome. All proceeds from the sale are used to purchase materials for the University Library system.

Materials may be delivered during normal business hours to the Bibliography Division office, Room 11, Main Library Building. Afterhours and weekends they may be left at the FOL bin at the book return desk in the Library entrance lobby. Gifts too large to carry may be delivered to the library's loading dock at the rear of South College before 4 p.m. on business days. Materials may also be mailed to "FOL Sale", UMass Library, Amherst, 01002. Donors should attach their names and addresses to their contributions.

Last fall's sale raised over $2,000 for library acquisitions, and the first sale in the fall of 1973 raised over $1,200.

Karate and Kung Fu

The first Karate and Kung Fu Championship is going to be held tomorrow at the Hampshire Regional YMCA in Northampton at 286 Prospect St.

This competition will mark the serious development of the Martial Arts in the area, since it is the first of its kind in Hampshire County.

Contestants will attend from all over New England. The competition will be held in Kata and Jumite. Kata is the fighting form in which participants perform a series of techniques against two or three imaginary opponents. Kumite is the fighting itself in which there is no head contact but full body contact is allowed.

Opera recital

The Music Department of the University of Massachusetts will present a Duet Recital of Opera Excerpts featuring Dorothy Ornest, soprano and Jon Humphrey, tenor, in Bowker Auditorium Sunday at 8:00 PM. Assisting will be pianist, Rodney Gisick.

The program which is a collection of some of the earliest operas to the most contemporary, includes works by Verdi, Stravinsky, Puccini, Mozart and Monteverdi.

All three performing artists are members of the UMass Music Faculty. This presentation is the final performance in the Faculty Recital Series for this academic season and is open to the public without charge.

Parking changes due

Applications for renew or change in present lot assignment must be turned into the Parking Office, Rm. 1, Munson Hall today.

If you have not received a renewal form by campus mail or wish to apply for a change in present lot assignment come into the Parking Office as soon as possible.

The registration fee must be paid with the application form: Renew registration fee is $3.00, Change registration fee is $5.00.

All applications received after today will be treated as new and will be processed after renew and change lot assignments have been made.

Herter Art Gallery

The Herter Gallery has now been established as an extension of the Art Dept. An extensive program of events, Gallery shows, and visiting artists has been set up to begin next fall. In addition to shows by incoming MFA students and BFA candidate shows, there will be such events as a poetry reading with related art works by two art dept. teachers. It is all adding up to an exciting program for next year. Don't miss it. We hope to enrich the community with our fine art programs, and we hope to see you. Look for the Herter Gallery logo design for information on the events for next year.

Logo design chosen

The Logo design, for the Herter Gallery, has been chosen. The contest for the Gallery's Logo was won by Denise Holland, an undergraduate in the UMass Design Dept.

Stripper prefers bare stage to politics

"I was discouraged by Watergate and felt, like the Roman Empire, America was crumbling from within." So a few hours of study away from a law degree, she traded the hushed quiet of a court for the rowdy nightlife of a fledgling sex queen.

Jaquie really Jaqueline Marsha Resenbloom began life with a "classic backstage mother... I had all the lessons and a lot of children's parts while I was growing up. I was pushed into the academic route so my mother could feel I was secure in a profession."

She never gave up the idea of going on stage after having the lead in her high school play. "Ultimately, it was my disenchantment with law school and politics and my love of the stage" which led to stripping and being an X-rated actress. "And I'm much happier than in the academic world."

"I'm a realist. I found too much distance between formulating theories and reality." She adds that being a top-billed stripper earns her "three or four times" as much money as a lawyer with the same number of years experience.

She's starring in the pornographic movie "Sodom and Gomorrah" which hasn't been released yet and plans another large budget porno film based on her life story, entitled "The Incredible Ms. Jaquie Brodie."

"Fans of erotic art don't want it to be treated as lousy, sleazy and cheap," she said.

"I'd like the more civilized approach, like the classic Greek views. The body is beautiful."

She claims her "timing is perfect" to let her become "a modern Marilyn Monroe, Linda Lovelace didn't do it. Marilyn Chambers didn't. Fannie Foxe didn't. In all of show business, we don't have a sex symbol. Raquel Welch has a very attractive body, but has not captured the imagination of the American fantasy. America is thirsting for a sex symbol."

When she stalks onto the stage she leaves thoughts of texts behind except perhaps for habeas corpus, the medieval Latin legal term meaning "you shall have the body."

Graduation speakers

Marina von Neumann Whitman, nationally recognized economist and distinguished public service professor at the University of Pittsburgh, will deliver the address at the 105th UMass Commencement, Saturday, May 31.

She is one of nine men and women who will receive honorary degrees during ceremonies at Alumni Stadium. Others include:

—Winthrop S. Dakin of Amherst, attorney and civic leader;

—Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Council of the Arts since 1969;

—Patricia Roberts Harris, attorney, former dean of Howard University Law School and former ambassador to Luxembourg;

—Henry W. Jensen, UMass alumnus and former dean of Warren Wilson College, Swannonoa, N.C.;

—N.Scott Momaday, Pulitzer Prize winning author and Stanford University professor:

—George L. Pumphret, 15 years a trustee and chairman of the UMass Building Authority in the growth years.

—Dr. Lamar Soutter, first Dean and Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts Medical School, and —Robert Chapman Sprague, founder of Sprague Electric Company and prominent industrialist.

Commencement will begin at 10 a.m. with Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery presiding. President Robert Wood will confer graduate and undergraduate degrees.

DeBusschere new ABA 'Mr Big'

By Steve Wilstein
UPI Sports Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — Two weeks after the National Basketball Association brought a man who made his name rubbing elbows with bigwigs to sit in its commissioner's office, the American Basketball Association Thursday announced Dave DeBusschere, who made his name throwing elbows against big guys, would represent its interests.

As the ABA's seventh commissioner in eight years, DeBusschere, like all his predecessors, said his primary goals are to strengthen the league and help bring about a merger with the NBA.

"I want to go with eight good, solid ball clubs rather than 10 weak ones," DeBusschere said. "If we can get good ownership in Memphis and San Diego we will go with 10 teams again."

In becoming, at age 34, the youngest commissioner of any major league in sports history, DeBusschere should receive solid support as the choice of the most influential voices among the ABA owners, Kentucky's John Y. Brown and New York's Roy Boe, in addition to outgoing ABA commissioner Tedd Munchak.

Brown, the most outspoken and perhaps the strongest voice among ABA owners, is in complete agreement with DeBusschere on paring down the league and put the consquences in even stronger terms.

"We've already made the decision to fold San Diego and Memphis and distribute the players to the other teams if they cannot come up with strong ownership by June 1," Brown said, "We've already taken all the action we can take with them."

It is in the economic best interests of both leagues to work out a merger agreement, most owners agree, and, while former Democratic Party Chief Larry O'Brien has the apparent task of persuading his former colleagues to pass the appropriate legislation on behalf of the NBA owners, DeBusschere may have been charged with the responsibility of making the players believe in the virtues of merger.

Historically it has been the NBA players, however, not the ABA players who have refused to ratify a merger agreement unless the owners gave up the reserve clause that presently binds a player to one team even beyond the years he actually signs to play for that team. Similarly, it has been the NBA owners, not the ABA owners, who have emphasized the need for the controversial clause.

If O'Brien is unable to make Congress or the NBA owners budge, a merger is still possible if DeBusschere can provide the leadership for a more conciliatory attitude on the part of the players in general.

"I know Larry O'Brien," DeBusschere said, "but I think he'll have a lot more influence in Washington than I will. I have better contacts on the basketball floor with the players and coaches. I'm not sure there's any relationship between our both being hired around the same time, but I'm sure we'll have conversations and maybe we'll be able to work well together."

Success has always come early to the ruggedly handsome DeBusschere and the $75,000 a year, 10-year contract he held at Nets general manager will be replaced by a multi-year contract as commissioner calling for a salary estimated from $100,000-$125,000.

"I was hesitant about taking this job," DeBusschere said, "but I feel in the commissioner's chair I can help the ABA and professional basketball better than I could as a general manager. I have an agreement with the Nets that if for any reason I no longer am commissioner that I can go back to them in some capacity."

DeBusschere, 6-6 and 230-pounds, was regarded as among the NBA's best defensive forwards while leading the New York Knicks to two league championships in 5½ years.

Ali predicts empty streets

By United Press International

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Muhammad Ali has another prediction about his heavyweight title bout with Ron Lyle tonight.

In addition to the pronouncement that challenger Lyle will "fall in eight," Ali declared that "there won't be no traffic on the roads anywhere in the country. Streets will be deserted, everybody will be inside their homes, in bars and in restaurants. They'll be watchin' me, the greatest fighter of all time, and it won't cost them nuthin."

That how Ali sees the impact his latest fight will have because it marks his first time on home television since he fought Karl Mildenberger of West Germany, Sept. 10, 1966, in Frankfurt.

Boston Garden—financial troubles

BOSTON (UPI) — Unless the city of Boston makes some financial concessions, sports fans may be grumbling about the Boston Garden for years to come.

"We're making a profit, but we're down substantially from last year," said Weston Adams Jr., president of the Boston Garden Corp., which runs the arena for the Storer Broadcasting Co.

The trouble is, the dingy, 50-year old structure is not making enough money to justify a substantial investment by Storer, Adams said in an interview.

About $12 million would be needed to make the garden a "comfortable arena," he said, but the improvements would not make enough additional money to justify the investment.

"As much as you'd like to, you just can't justify the expenditure until you can get it back," he said. "Nobody would like to get out this building more than I would. I would love to have a building that didn't leak, that didn't sag."

He said five years ago the Garden Corporation had a profit margin of about 60 per cent. It is now down to 30 per cent. That will not finance a new building, which would run about $30 million, or the improvements.

City money at six per cent interest, financed by a bond issue, would make Storer, "seriously consider a new building," he said, but the current 10 per cent commercial rate is unreachable. "But the city can't do that. If I was one of those marginal businessmen I would be very unhappy if the Boston Garden got preferential treatment."

"The yearly interest would be about $1 million," he said. "There's just no way we can do that."

In the year ending in Jan. 1, 1974, 1.2 million people attended 135 performances at the garden. In the year ending last Jan. 1, 107 performances drew 1.1 million.

Adams said Madison Square Garden in New York City had lost $7 million this year and many other arenas were in similar difficulty.

"When I see that Garden figure, it scares me," he said. "And that's in New York City, with 8 million people to draw on."

He said the renovations, which would be a "major engineering situation," would be considered "as soon as they know when the whole routine is going to level off. That depends on the general economy and the state of professional sports."

The refurbishing of the garden would include the re-engineering of the roof to eliminate supporting pillars which partially obstruct the view from certain sections of the arena, installation of air conditioning and escalators, and general sprucing up of the old building.

Riggs wants rematch; says King 'has her price'

NEW YORK (AP) — Bobby Riggs, a champion of Men's Lob but never Women's Lib, says he thinks he'd beat Billie Jean King if she'd grant him a rematch of their famed 1973 "Tennis Battle of the Sexes."

Alas, says the 57-year-old racqueteer, Miss King "says no. She says she wouldn't do it for $5 million. Now, I've been brought up with the belief almost everyone has a price. I don't know what hers is."

If a rematch occurs, he says, he'd like to play her under conditions favorable to his style — outdoors in daylight on a clay court, not indoors on an artificial surface under artificial lighting.

He concedes that in the last match "I underestimated her and overestimated myself. Classic mistakes. I'd avoid that next time. I'd train harder and prepare better. But I'm not making any excuses.

"I thought I was ready last time and gave her two chances — slim and none. Would you believe one of them through for her?

The hoopla of his nationally-televised loss to Ms. King, then 29, gave televised women's tennis a giant boost. Despite the loss, he still jokingly regards himself as America's top-seeded male chauvinist.

Irony of ironies, he's just wrapped up his first network job as a commentator on a women's pro tennis tournament NBC-TV taped last month in Florida and plans to air Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

Riggs, here for post-production work with co-commentator Julie Heldman, a top tennis pro, and sportscaster Jim Simson, acknowledged that because of his brash past some might be 'looking for me to make some remarks in the shows that are possibly controversial.

"But they're not going to find any. We played it just as a straight commentary because it was a very serious event."

He also had some surprisingly serious remarks about the tournament.

"It was the first chance I'd really had to study women's tennis and I have to admit they have a very good format," he said. "I can see now why they've caught on so well with the public.

"They play longer points than men and have a lot of rallies, which the crowd likes."

No Cuba trip in sight yet

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Post-Dispatch said Thursday organized baseball has been prevented by the U.S. State Department from arranging an all-star game between Americans and Cubans in Havana.

The newspaper said, "The State Department, which would have to validate the passports of the players, maintains that its policy toward Cuba is one of isolation. Consequently, baseball diplomacy has, so far, gone down swinging."

According to the newspaper, baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn has been trying for several months to arrange the game but has received no cooperation from the State Department. Joseph A. Gebhardt, a Washington lawyer and baseball fan, had sought State Department permission to go to Havana to make arrangements for the game but was denied permission to travel to Cuba.

The team will depart for the people's republic of China on Friday for a three week visit. (UPI Telephoto)

TIME TO TAKE IT EASY: The UMass baseball team finishes up their season tomorrow afternoon when they travel to Storrs, Connecticut for a 1 p.m. doubleheader with the UConn Huskies. (Staff Photo by Chris Bourne)

'Mural coverage unfair?

After reading your (Russ Smith's) article "Ballbusters Winners or Losers" I feel very obligated to give the Beta Kappa Phi side of the story. First of all, Beta Kappa Phi made it to the finals in both softball and soccer. Due to scheduling both final games were slated to begin at 5:15. We have two players who are starters on both teams(soccer and softball). In every previous instance with this scheduling conflict we were able to change one of the times so they would not conflict. However, when the intramural office called the Ballbuster manager and asked him if he could change the time the manager replied "NO". Thus we were forced to play the softball game without 2 starters who both chose to play soccer because they were team co-captains in that sport. Last week our starting shortstop from our "B" team. They said no — if he wasn't on the roster he couldn't play. We had to abide by the rules and play the game without 2 starters and 1 injured shortstop. Our team was quite upset when they saw the ballbusters practicing at 4:00 and drinking beer at 6:30. In other words they easily could have rescheduled the game for 4:30 or 6:00 but they wanted to take advantage of the situation.

Now as to how we knew their player Dave Fisher was ineligible. I went to high school with Dave and thus knew him. When I saw him at first base practicing, I just out of curiosity, looked to see where he was batting in the order. When I did not see his name on the lineup sheet I became suspicious and upon checking it out with the intramural office I found him not on the roster.

I simply did my job as Athletic Chairman at Beta Kappa Phi and reported it to the superiors present and the umpires. The decision to go through with the protest was something taken as a team vote in which everything involved was discussed. After reading your article I feel that the article not only attempted to slander our house but also the Greek System. Let's face facts; the Greek System has the best athletes. It is too bad that people not within that system feel it is their obligation to knock it in any way they can. I feel that a personal apology is in order or at least the inclusion of our side to show the readers the entire story.

How you (Russ Smith) could have asked their manager for the story without even consulting Beta Kappa Phi is beyond me.

Top women rowers leave UMass

By Teresa Hanafin

Well, it's time to take a long look back and make a careful reassessment of the past season for the Women's Crew Team.

Their overall record was 5-1. After bowing to Radcliffe in the opener, the rowers went on to four straight victories over BU (twice), Dartmouth, and Conn. College.

However, with a third place seeding in the EAWRC sprints, they failed to qualify out of their heat for the final. First place in the consolation final was meager compensation for what should have been a much higher finish.

But Coach Bob Spousta was optimistic in his reflections.

"For the season, I have to say we did very well, when you consider that six of the nine people in our varsity boat were new."

He feels that inexperience caught up with the crew at the championships. "We were trying too hard, got uptight, and panicked."

Once again, the optimism shone through. "We brought our level of rowing up a notch," he commented. "We also introduced a lot of people to rowing in good races."

Out of this year's varsity boat, only three rowers will be returning. Gone will be Stroke Debbie Kirchmer to graduate, as will her fellow captain Joanne Andreas, who is going on an exchange to Idaho. Heide Braun is going back to Germany, although it is rumored that she'd like to return. Becky Love will be in Oregon fishing for salmon, and Barb Andreas will be practice teaching at Mount Hermon.

Of the JV, three women are bidding farewell. Louise Romanow is graduating, Trish Donovan is trekking to England, and Nancy LaFosse is heading for Florida.

There is a lot of room for new people with such a large turnover. Spousta plans on definitely continuing with a beginning crew. As a matter of fact, there will be a time set aside during which Bob wants to meet with anyone interested in joining crew in the fall. Next Tuesday, May 20, Bob will be in the tank room downstairs in WOPE from 3:00 to 6:00 in the afternoon to talk with prospective candidates.

Women interested are urged to go — you don't have to be a freshman; seniors are welcome, also.

According to Spousta, next fall the emphasis will be on technique and learning to row well. The spring will bring more intensive rowing and racing, following the pattern of the past year.

If the pattern of wins can also be repeated, this combined with increasingly experienced rowers shows a great future for Women's Crew.

Beta Kappa Phi softball champs

By Russ Smith

Beta Kappa Phi won their protest with the IM office concerning their game with the Ballbusters (one of their players was playing under an alias), and thus won the Campus Championship via a forfeit-probably the first time the softball title has been forfeited away since intramurals began. It seems one of the Fratmen went to school with the illegal player, and looked to see where he was batting in the line-up. Ironically, if the kid had used his real name on the score card, BKP never would've known he wasn't on the roster...to top it off, another team from BKP won the men's soccer title, shutting out the Buckeyes 3-0.

Over the year as a whole, teams participating in IM's accumulate points, just on the basis of entering, and how they do in each sport. Each major division (Men's Residence Hall, Frats., Independents, Sororities etc.) has a rotating cup (along the same idea as the Stanley Cup in hockey). The leaders in each division are: Fraternity - close battle between BKP and Phi Mu Delta; Men's residence hall - the Streakers; Women's Residence hall - JQA Plumpers; Sororities - 2nd floor SAM; Independents - Buckeyes (men) and the Boats (women's); Grad-Faculty - English Dept.

Pitches:...practice up on your football, tennis, and volleyball skills over the summer, 'cause those are the biggies for the Fall IM season....the Sylvan softball tournament is in the final stage - the winner between JJ Sheehan and Sons-McNamara Magicians game will play the Brown Bombers for the Area Title, and a keg of beer...I'd like to apologize to Jeff (my roommate's friend) and Jon (my friend..?) for not writing the story I promised them on the crew team...I'd like to thank Pop's (Steve) Ryan for the use of his electric typewriter, without which these fantastic IM stories couldn't've been written (no applause, please..)

Baseball ends at UConn

The UMass baseball team will wind up their season tomorrow when they travel to UConn for a 1:00 doubleheader with the Huskies.

The Minutemen, 10-17 on the year, will be attempting to finish with a decent Yankee Conference to ease some of the pain of this disappointing season. They are currently 4-4 in the conference, while Maine, at 5-2-1 has already clinched the title.

Jeff Reardon, who pitched a two-hitter against Dartmouth on Tuesday and is 4-4 overall, will start the first game, while the game two starter has yet to be determined.

FOUL TIPS...Latest statistics show Craig Allegrezza (.363), Pete Backstrom (.333), and John Seed (.323) leading the team in hitting...Allegrezza (4-3, 2.37 ERA) still leads the pitchers...UMass players will all be busy playing ball this summer. Allegrezza will be at Grand Junction, Colorado, while Mike Koperniak (Orleans), Jeff Reardon, and Jerry Erb (both at Cotuit) will be playing in the Cape League...The rest will be in various semi-pro leagues near their homes.

UMass baseball—'What happened?'

By Bob Higgins

When a team has a record of 10-17, usually it's pretty easy to point out the weaknesses which caused this type of disappointing season.

But when a team performs so poorly, despite the fact that it possesses at least as much, and possibly more talent than most of its opponents, a lot of important questions must be asked.

In essence, this was the situation with the UMass varsity baseball team this season. After watching this squad and their opponents this season, it is the judgement of many (myself included) that this squad had the talent to be one of the best teams in New England.

So what happened? Basically, the reasons can be divided into four categories (in no particular order): (1) injuries, (2) inconsistent pitching and defense, (3) a poor mental attitude, and (4) coaching techniques and perhaps an overestimation of talent.

First we must establish the amount of talent on the squad. There are weaknesses, particularly in at least one outfield position, shortstop, and relief pitching.

But at first, second, third, and center (and possibly left) field, the team is as strong, particularly offensively, as any in New England. John Seed (first), Mike Koperniak (second), and Jerry Mondalto (third, and short late in the season) all are fine hitters, and Koperniak and Mondalto are defensive standouts, despite Koperniak's off season, both at bat and in the field.

In the outfield, Pete Backstrom does everything well both offensively and defensively, but he missed a couple of weeks with a hamstring pull (more on injuries later). Steve Wright is adequate defensively and strong .250 hitter. The right field position was a problem all season long, but all squads have at least one glaring weakness.

Behind the plate, John Healy, a fine receiver, was injured all year, but Jim Black, one of the strongest hitters you'll ever see and a good defensive catcher, filled in well. Even Black was injured, however, and Bob Moore, a good catcher but a weak hitter, had to fill in.

Which brings us to the most important part of any baseteam, the pitching. Craig Allegrezza, through the first half of the year, was as good as any pitcher in New England, but tailed off at the end. Jeff Reardon picked up during the last few weeks and pitched almost as well, but the two men were never hot together. Plus, Rich Kelly, a probable starter with a lot of other New England teams, was in the bullpen, as was an inconsistent John McManus.

So there you have it. It reads like a press release for the Oakland A's, but few could argue with the facts. Now, we must decide what happened to this bunch of apparent superstars.

It sounds like a lame excuse, but it is impossible to ignore the injuries that riddled the team all season. Backstrom and Black each missed two weeks with hamstring pulls, and neither ever regained full speed. Seed pulled a groin muscle and missed a few games, and was at half-speed for a long time. Healy's sore shoulder prevented him from catching almost all year. Koperniak destroyed his hand and missed the last three weeks of the season. Pitcher Jerry Erb came up with a sore shoulder, and Allegrezza's recurring arm problems came on at the end of the year.

Since the team lacked depth, these injuries were devastating. The results were twofold; a noticeable lack of timely hitting, and some extremely inconsistent defense.

As stated before, the pitching was inconsistent. This problem, however, came about in large measure because of another more serious problem.

To understand this, we must go back to the beginning of the season, when the team travelled to North Carolina during spring vacation. In the first game of the season against the University of North Carolina, they entered the ninth with a 4-2 lead. But UNC came up with a three-run homer off a wild John McManus, and UMass lost, 5-4.

Two days later, they lost a doubleheader to High Point College. In game two, High Point came up with six runs in the seventh inning, and won 7-6, after the Minutemen had a 6-1 lead.

The tone was then set for the whole season. The attitude became ingrained that no matter how big a lead they got, their opponents would come up with a big inning and pull the game out. And invariably, due mainly to mental and other types of errors, this is what happened.

The best example of this is the first game of the doubleheader with Rhode Island. Jeff Reardon started the game, struck out twelve and gave up no hits through the first five innings. Meanwhile, his teammates had scored a couple of runs to protect him.

In the sixth, Reardon began to tire, as he gave up three hits for a run with one out. The next three plays went as follows: Jim Cullen booted a grounder at short, three men let a popup fall among them in short center field, and Al Lapriore dropped a fly deep in center. Reardon should have been out of the inning with minimal damage, and instead the game was lost, 6-3.

What can be done to prevent this type of attitude from developing? Assistant Coach Phil Rollins believes that a more aggressive style of play would prevent the squad from becoming complacent and the doomsday feeling from invading.

"I feel that overall we do as much basestealing, hit-and-runs, bunting, and so forth, as most teams we play," said Coach Dick Bergquist. Of course, the coach is limited because of a lack of team speed. However, the feeling always seemed to be that they were continually waiting for the long ball, and often it didn't come.

People close to the team have noticed other problems with Bergquist's coaching. According to some, the coach is not particularly adept at handling players, and there is a noticeable lack of communication.

"Any time there's a record of 10-17," said Bergquist, "there's gonna be communication problems. When you have a record of 24-5, there are no problems.

"People who aren't playing and think they should be can't say anything when the team is winning, but when they start losing, then problems develop," he added.

What does Bergquist think about this year's team? "When I started the season, I thought we'd be as good as any team in New England," said the coach. "We still are, on any given day, such as the second game at Dartmouth and the Maine shutout. However, we just haven't performed that way. Maybe I misjudged some of the talent.

"The difference between an outstanding season and finishing the way we did is so small it's incredible. Little things (dropped flies, missed signals, missed bunts) that many people wouldn't notice can make all the difference in the world.'

All of which brings us to one point — next year. Backstrom, Healy, and reserve infielder Joe Marzilli are the only are the only seniors, and while their loss will undoubtedly be felt, there will be a lot of talent coming back.

But Bergquist is taking nothing for granted. "I'll be looking for the best player at each position in the fall (the team plays a strong fall schedule)," he said. "The whole pitching staff will be returning but everyone on the staff will have to earn a spot for himself next fall."

There are also a number of good recruits coming in, and some promising players from Jeff McKay's 14-4 JV squad.

The talent will be there, in some large measure. And there's nothing Dick Bergquist would rather see than a winning season. It will be an interesting year.

Summertime Blues

The 1974-75 athletic year was not a very successful one for UMass teams. In the fall, the football team had students turning to the Patriots or personal favorites to satisfy their spectator frustrations. The cross country team enjoyed an outstanding season, finishing eighth in the nation while the soccer team was not picked for post season play after an impressive regular season showing.

The winter schedule resulted in successful efforts in gymnastics and although the basketball team can't be termed a disappointment, defeat in the first round of the NIT once again was hard to accept. The hockey team had its share of problems, missing out on a playoff bid, and women's basketball gained the spotlight several times.

The baseball team's showing was below par, while track and lácrosse were moderately successful. Golf was the big tournament winner during the spring, but the overall performances, taking into consideration both the major and minor sports were ones to cause blusterous conversation.

President Ford's associations with sport were evident in his coaching of the Mayaguez incident. Even master strategist George Allen might had trouble calling the right playin such a crucial situation, but Ford's play calling is hard to second-guess, especially since it resulted in "victory" for the U.S. team. On the other hand, had the strategy somehow backfired, the second-guessers would be enjoying themselves.

Since this is the final day the Collegian sports pages will be published this semester. I suppose sports readers will have to settle for hometown newspaper coverage. It was good while it lasted.

Just thinking about those long, hot summer days and baseball doubleheaders ... a couple of beers ... etc.

For those who easily grow tired of studying for finals, the New England Championships for track will be held at the Llewelyn Derby Track, starting today and çontinuing through tomorrow. An intrasquad lacrosse game, tomorrow at 1 p.m. may also be worth attending.

It's about time people started to realize that sportswriters are journalists, too. You don't have to be a news writer or editorialist to be a knowledgeable journalist, which some "open-minded" writers and editors never seem to take into consideration. These newspeople really believe that sportswriters are being blinded, and are unaware of newspaper operations. It's the other way around.

Well, it's the end of Wednesday night layout, three articles a day, and trying to find column material for a few months. Phew! What a relief. Well, I'm getting those summertime blues. You know, that urge to just go lay in the sun and enjoy whatever happens around you. Have a great summer and goodbye until September.

Trackers running in NE's

By Scott Hayes

Put yourself in the shoes of an oddsmaker. The home crowd and facilities definitely help a team and the defending champions are usually favored. So that means that the UMass track team is a 5-1 favorite to win the New England Championships, which start today at the UMass track (4:00 p.m.) and continue tomorrow at 11 a.m., right?

Well, not exactly, but the Minutemen are among the leading contenders. UMass can expect strong showings from Connecticut, Northeastern and Dartmouth as the squad attempts to retain ownership fo the New England team title.

The trackmen have been preparing for the meet since the start of the season. "There's no way we could be more prepared," assistant coach Mike Muska commented. The team is healthy and his fifty entrants scheduled to compete, which is a considerably large number of participants.

Three hundred and fifty competitors from forty colleges are expected to be in Amherst for the 88th running of the New Englands.

The list of outstanding performers to watch includes twelve athletes who captured first places last year at Brown. Among those who earned individual honors last season are Springfield's Abe Davis (triple jump), Minutemen Mike Geraghty (long jump), Boris "Dov" Djerassi, Northeastern's exceptional hammer thrower and teammate Howie Scribner, a miler.

High hurdler Mike Reed of Williams, potential Olympian Keith Francis of Boston College (880-yard run), Fred Hintlian, an intermediate hurdler from Tufts, three miler Mike Buckley of NU and UConn's standout Rich White in the shot put are top competitors as well.

Rhode Island pole vaulter Mark McCracken, Bob Cummins of Dartmouth (javelin) and high jumper Fred Ron from Holy Cross complete the list of last year's winners.

Boston College and Brown are a pair of strong teams that may also enter the battle for team honors.

UConn is expected to pile up points in the field events while Dartmouth boasts the most balanced squad, splitting its scoring evenly in the field and running events. Northeastern defeated the Minutemen by six points last Saturday and took the indoor championship, so tri-captains Geraghty, Tom Beland and Steve Crimmin will have to lead a solid team effort if UMass is to triumph its own backyard.

Bob and Ken Adamson, along with Geraghty, Pete Ryan, Toney Pendleton, Joe Martens and Rusty Kendall will bolster the jumping crew.

The tracksters hope to score heavily in the distance and jumping events. Both the distancement and jumpers have been consistent throughout the season and should be aided by the home track advantage.

The biggest part of the track season will be during the next weeks, including the New Englands and the ensuing IC4A's and Nationals. The trackmen had their first meet snowed out, then compiled a 3-2 dual meet record while losing two close contests to Dartmouth and Northeastern. UMass also won its second straigh Boston College Relay title and finished second in the Yankee Conference.

AROUND THE TRACK ... On a rainy day three years ago—the last time the New Englands were held at UMass---the Minutemen finished second to Northeastern. Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas may be headed for the NCAA meet, which will conclude brilliant careers for both harriers.

Stickers finish with scrimmage

By Scott Hayes

The UMass lacrosse team, which "realized its own poetential" during the season, according to coach Dick Garber, will end its schedule with an intrasquad game, tomorrow at 1:00 p.m.

Since the game against Middlebury was cancelled because the Gorillas' opponents were invited to the ECAC tournament, the freshmen and seniors will combine to face the sophomores and juniors. More than likely, the game iill be closer than the majority of regular season games, which UMass easily won.

Garber feels that the present squad "is one of the best teams that ever played at UMass." The Gorillas had a number of exceptional players and when they played as a team, it was something to watch. According to Garber, the only real disappointment of the season was the Brown game, which UMass lost by a 15-8 score.

With the goal of developing the best lacrosse in New England, Garber once again completed a successful season. Since 1969 lacrosse has been on the upswing and next year should be no exception.

If there was any unsuccessful aspect of the season it was the end of the schedule which failed to provide competition for the UMass squad. "The guys didn't have to play hard to win. The competition just wasn't there and I know the players look forward to good competition," Garber said. The Gorillas pounded MIT and Springfield, (22-5 and 27-8) in their last two games as the regular starters saw little action at their ususal positions.

The highlights of the season included the first game against Cornell (a 16-10 loss). The opening game gave the players confidence that they could play against any team in the country, Garber pointed out. Cornell is ranked second in the national poll. Against Powerful Cornell, the Gorillas rebounded from a 6-0 first period deficit to take a 7-6 halftime lead. It was a display of firepower that reoccured periodically during the season.

The 22-4 rout of Dartmouth was a big win, but more important was an 11-10 victory over Cortland at the losers' field. UMass toppled Harvard 15-7, but four games later couldn't pull together at Brown. The result was a 15-8 loss and the season tapered off after the Bruins took the New England title. The MIT and Springfield games were anti-climactic and Garber hopes to improve competition. We already have Syracuse scheduled for next year," the UMass coach stated.

The Gorillas compiled an 8-3 record, with Jeff Spooner, Bill Blaustein, Kurt Olson and a collection of balanced midfielders leading the way.

Garber believes Spooner "is probably the best attackman in New England and among the best in the country." Spooner still has two years left at UMass, but Blaustein and Olson, who are possibly two of the best defensemen in the East, will be hard to replace.

On different days, different midfielders sparked the team with an outstanding game. But balance and depth were the strengths at midfield.

Garber will be losing seven seniors, but a solid nucleus of players will remain. When you take into consideration that the team was one of the best ever fielded at UMass and that next season may be better, success is hard to measure in won-loss terms or performances against a particular team.

STICK SAVES...Spooner easily won the scoring title with 27 goals and 38 assists for 65 points. Billy O'Brien finished second with 48 points. Frank Garahan totalled 36 goals — a team high. Kevin Patterson (31 goals) and Garahan ended in a tie for third place.

UMass outscored opponents by a 2-1 margin. The Gorillas scored 206 goals and allowed only 103. The second period was the most productive for UMass. The team scored an amazing 54 goals and was scored upon only 18 times. In other words, the Gorillas scored three goals for every one they allowed in the second period, for the duration of the season.

Bobby Durland finished with a 6.6 save average and 7.0 goals against. Senior Jim Haddad averaged 4.8 saves per game while allowing 2.9 goals. Durland played in more games (11) and totalled 73 saves to Haddad's 38, however.

Without football

Vermont — just not the same

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — The quarterback has found a new team, the head coach is looking for a job and the publicity director says things just won't be the same.

Caught in a severe budget crisis, the University of Vermont trustees last Nov. 13 agreed reluctantly to eliminate several positions and activities — including the intercollegiate football program at a savings of $250,000 annually.

The response was mixed. Supporters said football was an integral and vital part of the curriculum. Opponents called it a costly luxury in austere times.

The trustees stuck to their decision and football became the second varsity sport to die at Vermont in the 1970s. The school dropped its baseball program for economic reasons after the 1971 season.

The move came at a time when UVM grid fortunes — despite 4-6 record in 1974 — were considered on the rise, thanks to the rebuilding efforts of head coach Carl Falivene.

Now, a half year later, it still may be too early to gauge accurately the full effect, according to sports information director Dick Whittier.

"I'm not convinced that it's sunk in yet," Whittier says. "I think the reaction is yet to come. The way to measure it is to wait until next fall and see how the kids react to the absence of football.

"They're going to miss it; I don't think there is any question about it."

According to Whittier, about 50 returning ball players — out of the 75 member team — are still at the University. Those who stay will retain their football scholarships, he said.

One starter from last year's squad who has transferred elsewhere in pursuit of a football program is quarterback Bob Bateman. The 6-foot-6 bateman, an all-Yankee conference and all-New England quarterback, will play for Brown.

Wide receiver Paul Jarry will play for the University of New Hampshire and center Peter Gursky wil anchor the University of Connecticut's offensive line.

Minutemen golfers attain their goal, reach NCAA Nationals in Columbus this June

By Ron Arena

At the outset of the fall campaign nearly a year back, the UMass golf team, players and coach, set a common goal for themselves — qualifying for the NCAA. All other accomplishments would go for naught if they failed to gain entrance into the Nationals. Forget last fall when they outclassed all opponents by winning the New Englands by 22 strokes; ignore the fact that UMass tied for the Eastern crown, or that this spring they compiled a 10-1-1 record in dual, tri, and quad matches. Even stunning the Yankee Conference with an amazing 32-stroke victory in the league championships, or proving to be the best in the area by winning the Mass State tournament would provide little satisfaction or consolation for the Minutemen without that NCAA qualification.

But now, nine months later, after endless tee shots, countless tense putts, and nearly an infinite amount of other nail-biting situations. The UMass golfers can smile proudly knowing that six weeks from now they will be in Columbus, Ohio participating against the finest golf teams in the country — a list which includes themselves.

"We set our goals on this a year and a half ago," claims Howie Terban, one of two seniors who will make the trip for UMass. "Our whole team worked at it and we felt we deserved it just on the basis of what we did the past year."

The Nationals now are a whole new season. With that goal reached, the golfers have heightened their ambition. "Now that we have qualified," claims Fan Gaudette, UMass mentor, "we're not just packing it in. We want more."

Realistically though, how much more can they get? Will an Eastern representative, a team that finds its playing time severely restricted due to the New England climate, be any challenge to teams such as Florida, Alabama, or Houston? In December, while us Yankees find ourselves shoveling snow, these southern teams are playing golf in 80-degree temperatures. No wonder with these limitations that no team from the East has even made the cut (after 36 holes) in the last 15 years.

Regardless of this noticeable disadvantage, the local linksters view their chances in the 72-hole four-day tournament with optimism. "I don't want to come right out and say we're gonna win the thing," said Gaudette, "but with a few breaks, you never know. With 72 holes, anything can happen.

"We'd like to perform well, and we're capable of doing just that," prophesized the coach.

Terban had his own philosophy. "These players from southern schools are used to scoring 68's and 67's, but they won't do that on this course. The scores will be around 74 and 75, and this might psych them out."

Another advantage, he felt, may be the 72 holes. "That's better for us," he claimed. "In the long run we are very consistent, and I think that no other school really has better players."

Perhaps Terban is exaggerating his team's chances. Some of these opposing schools will be turning out future pros, and obviously these players should be disciplined enough to keep their composure under all circumstances.

So maybe a more - down - to - earth goal would be to make the cut and finish in the top 15, which would earn them All-American status. This could be achieved, but only on the basis of a good team performance. Says John Lasek, "If we play to our capabilities, we have a good chance of making the cup."

All five Minutemen in the Nationals, Terban, Lasek, Joe Artman, Rick Olson, and Glen Sullivan, are capable of four good rounds of about 75. A consistent performance from each should result in a good finish, but only time will tell. Claims Gaudette, "At least we're going to the Nationals and we'll play aginst the best. We'll really see just how good we are."
